LINGUISTIC SURVEY OF INDIA.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION ADOPTED.

A.—For the Dēva-nāgarī alphabet, and others related to it—

| श ṣa | ष sha | स sa | ह ha | उ ra | ट rha | क la | ऋ ṭha | | | | | |

Visarga (:) is represented by h, thus क्रमशः kramaśah. Anuswāra (◌ं) is represented by m, thus सिंह simh, वंश vamś. In Bengali and some other languages it is pronounced ng, and is then written ng; thus वंश bangśa. Anunāsika or Chandra-bindu is represented by the sign ~ over the letter nasalized, thus मेँ mē̃.

B.—For the Arabic alphabet, as adapted to Hindōstānī—

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---------|---|----|---|----|---|----|---|---|---|----|
| ا | a, etc. | ج | j | د | d | ر | r | س | s | ع | ' |
| ب | b | چ | ch | ڈ | ḍ | ڑ | r̥ | ش | sh | غ | gh |
| پ | p | ھ | h | ذ | z | ز | z | ص | s | ف | f |

| | | | | | | | | ل | l | | |
| | | | | | | | | م | m | | |
| | | | | | | | | ن | n | | |
| | | | | | | | | و | when representing anunāsika in Dēva-nāgarī , by " over nasalized vowel. | | |
| | | | | | | | | و | w or v | | |
| | | | | | | | | ھ | h | | |
| | | | | | | | | ی | y, etc. | | |

Tanwīn is represented by n, thus فان, fānan. Alif-e maqṣūra is represented by ā;—thus دعوى da'wā.

In the Arabic character, a final silent h is not transliterated,—thus banda. When pronounced, it is written,—thus ḡunāh.

Vowels when not pronounced at the end of a word, are not written in transliteration. Thus बन lan, not bana. When not pronounced in the middle of a word or only slightly pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word, they are written in small characters above the line. Thus (Hindī) देखता dēkh^atā, pronounced dēkhtā; (Kāshmirī) चह ^ह ts^h; کار ^ا kar^a, pronounced kor; (Bihārī) देखथि dēkhathⁱ.

C.—Special letters peculiar to special languages will be dealt with under the head of the languages concerned. In the meantime the following more important instances may be noted :—

(a) The ts sound found in Marāṭhī (च), Paṣhtō (چ), Kāśmīrī (چ, च), Tibetan (ཅ), and elsewhere, is represented by ts. So, the aspirate of that sound is represented by tsʰ.

(b) The dz sound found in Marāṭhī (ज), Paṣhtō (ج), and Tibetan (ཇ) is represented by dz, and its aspirate by dzʰ.

(c) Kāśmīrī (ن) (ञ) is represented by ñ.

(d) Sindhī (ڄ), Western Pañjābī (and elsewhere on the N.-W. Frontier) (ڄ), and Puṣhtō (ڄ) or (ڄ) are represented by ṇ.

(e) The following are letters peculiar to Paṣhtō :—

ت t; چ ts or dz, according to pronunciation; د d; ر r; ځ ɟ or g, according to pronunciation; ښ ʃ or h, according to pronunciation; ښ ʃ or h.

(f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhī :—

ب bb; پ bh; ت th; ٺ t; ڻ !h; ف ph; ڄ jj; ڄ jʰ; ڄ chh; ڄ ñ; ڄ dh; ڄ d; ڄ dā; ڄ dh; ڪ k; ڪ kh; ڳ gg; ڳ gh; ڳ n; ڳ n.

D.—Certain sounds, which are not provided for above, occur in transcribing languages which have no alphabet, or in writing phonetically (as distinct from transliterating) languages (such as Bengali) whose spelling does not represent the spoken sounds. The principal of these are the following :—

ā, represents the sound of the a in all.

ā, „ „ „ a in hat.

ē, „ „ „ e in mel.

ō, „ „ „ o in hot.

e, „ „ „ é in the French était.

o, „ „ „ o in the first o in promote.

ö, „ „ „ ö in the German schön.

ü, „ „ „ u in the „ muhe.

th, „ „ „ th in think.

dh, „ „ „ th in this.

The semi-consonants peculiar to the Mundā languages are indicated by an apostrophe. Thus k', t', p', and so on.

E.—When it is necessary to mark an accented syllable, the acute accent is used. Thus in (Khōwār) āssistai, he was, the acute accent shows that the accent falls on the first, and not, as might be expected, on the second syllable.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THIS volume, dealing with the Central Group of Indo-Aryan Vernaculars, is divided into four parts, viz. :—

| | | |
|-----------|--------------|-------------------------------------|
| Part i, | dealing with | Western Hindi and Pañjābī |
| Part ii, | „ | Rājasthānī and Gujarātī |
| Part iii, | „ | The Bhil Languages, Khandeshī, etc. |
| Part iv, | „ | Pahārī. |

Of these, Part iii has been prepared partly by Professor Konow and partly by me. I am entirely responsible for the other Parts

The languages forming this Central Group, and the numbers of their speakers as reported for this Survey, are as follows :—

[illegible]

TOTAL . 83,348,070

Of these, the most important, both politically and in point of numbers, is Western Hindi. One of its dialects is Hindōstānī, the lingua franca of India. It should, however, be remembered that Hindōstānī is not a typical dialect of the language. The typical dialect is the Braj Bhākhā spoken round Agra and Mathura. The home of Hindōstānī as a vernacular is more to the North-West, on the border of the Panjab, and that dialect is therefore much infected by the Pañjābī lying to its West.²

Western Hindī is spoken in the western half of the United Provinces, and Pañjābī in the Central Panjab. Rājasthānī is spoken in Rajputana, and Gujarātī in Gujarat. The Bhil languages and those grouped with them are spoken mainly in the Bhil country and in Khandesh, but scattered colonies are found in several localities of northern India, from Midnapore in Bengal to the central Panjab.

It would be impossible, in the present volume, to give a detailed account of the relationship of the languages of the Central Group to the other Indo-Aryan vernaculars. The question involves a consideration of the entire history of the growth and expansion of all the Aryan languages, ancient and modern, of northern India, and must therefore be deferred to the Introductory Volume of this Survey, which cannot be prepared till all the remaining volumes are in type. Suffice it here to say that the typical language of the Central Group is Western Hindī. Pañjābī is a language resulting from the amalgamation of two very different forms of speech,—the old Piśācha language that lies at the base of the Lahndā spoken in the Western Panjab, and the Prakrit of the Midland that was the parent of Western Hindī. Rājasthānī represents the overflow of Western Hindī to the South and South-West, but is much infected by the language of Gūjar invaders who came partly from the West and partly from Sapādalaksha or the Himalayan tract between Nepal and Kashmir. Gujarātī is a further continuation of this overflow. It has as a basis an old North-Western language of Piśācha origin akin to Sindhī, which was overwhelmed by the Western Hindī invasion, but traces of which can still be observed. The Bhil dialects are mostly broken forms of Gujarātī spoken by non-Aryan tribes. The three Pahārī languages have at their base an old language akin to Piśācha, spoken by the Khaśa tribe, which has been superseded by the language of Gūjar invaders. This mixed form of speech was carried, as above stated, into Rajputana, and was again, in its turn, strongly influenced in later times by re-immigrants to the Himālaya from Rajputana, who now spoke Rājasthānī. Particulars regarding the growth and expansion of each of these various languages will be found in the Introductions to the various sections.

¹ The figures for Eastern Pahari include only those speakers that are resident in India. They do not include the unknown, but much larger, number resident in Nepal, the home of the language.

² The principal point in which Hindōstānī has been affected by Pañjābī is that nouns that in Western Hindī end in au or ō, such as ghōrau or ghōrō, a horse, in Hindōstānī, as in Pañjābī, end in ā, as in ghōrā. Another important point is the use of the postposition nē to indicate the case of the agent.

The four parts of this volume were prepared and sent to press some years ago, but difficulties connected with the obtainment of proper types have greatly delayed the printing of Parts i and iv. I regret that owing to this the Bibliographies of these parts are not entirely up to the dates printed on the title-pages.

GEORGE A. GRIERSON.

CAMBERLEY;

August 11, 1914.

WESTERN HINDĪ.

The home of Western Hindī closely agrees with the Madhyadēśa, or Midland, of ancient Sanskrit geographers. The Madhyadēśa was the country between the Saraswatī on the west and what is now Allahabad on the east. Its northern boundary was the Himālaya Range, and its southern the Narbada River. Between these limits lay, according to tradition, the holy land of Brahmanism. It was the centre of Hindū civilisation, and the abode on earth of its deities. Western Hindī does not extend so far east as Allahabad—its eastern limit is about Cawnpore,—but in other respects the area in which it is spoken is almost exactly the same as the Madhyadēśa. It is spoken as a vernacular over the western portion of the United Provinces, in the eastern districts of the Panjab, in Eastern Rajputana, in Gwalior and Bundelkhand, and in the north-western districts of the Central Provinces. Moreover, its most important dialect, Hindōstānī, is spoken and understood, and is even amongst some classes of the population a vernacular, over the whole of the Indian Peninsula.

Western Hindī has five dialects,—Hindōstānī, Bāngarū, Braj Bhākhā, Kanaujī, and Bundēlī. Hindōstānī, as a local vernacular, is spoken in Western Rohilkhand, the Upper Gangetic Dōāb, and the Panjab District of Ambala. It has also been carried over the whole of India by Musalmān conquerors, and has received considerable literary culture. Under these conditions it has three main varieties, Literary Hindōstānī proper, employed by both Musalmāns and Hindūs for literary purposes and as a lingua franca; Urdū, employed chiefly by Musalmāns and by Hindūs who have adopted the Musalmān system of education, and a modern development, called Hindī, employed only by Hindūs who have been educated on a Hindū system. Urdū, itself, has two varieties, the standard literary form of Delhi and Lucknow, and the Dakhinī, spoken, and used as a literary medium, by Musalmāns of Southern India.

Bāngarū is the dialect of Western Hindī which is spoken in the Eastern Panjab.

Bāngarū.

It is also called Jātū and Hariānī. It is much influenced by the neighbouring Rājasthānī and Pañjābī.

Braj Bhākhā

Braj Bhākhā is the dialect of the west central Dōāb and the country to its north and to its south.

Kanaujī is really a form of Braj Bhākhā and is only given separate consideration in deference to popular opinion. It is spoken in the east central Dōāb and the country to its north.

Kanaujī.

Bundēlī.

Bundēlī is spoken in Gwalior and Bundelkhand. It is also spoken in the adjoining districts of the Central Provinces.

All these dialects are described with considerable detail on the following pages, and it will suffice to give here the total estimated number of speakers of each—

Hindōstānī—

| Kanaujī | . | 4,481,500 | |
| | | | 12,845,774 |
| Bundēli | . | . | 6,869,201 |
| Total estimated number of speakers of Western Hindī | | | 38,013,928 |

This is about the same as the population of the United Kingdom in 1891 (38,104,975), and two-thirds of a million less than that of France at the present time (38,641,333). I roughly estimate the area in which it is spoken at about 200,000 square miles, with which we may compare the area of the German Empire (209,000), and that of France (204,000).

As explained in the Introductory Note, Western Hindī is the purest representative of that Group. It is directly derived from the Apabhramśa dialect corresponding to Śaurasēnī, the most Sanskritic of all the Prakrits ; it is spoken in the area which was the centre from which Aryan civilisation was diffused over Hindostan ; and the head-quarters of its principal dialect—Braj Bhākhā—is Mathurā,—the Máδoupa ῆ τῶν Θεῶν of the Greeks, and in ancient times one of the most sacred cities of India.

Of the four languages which form the Central Group of Indo-Aryan vernaculars, Western Hindī is the one which is the most typical of the group. In fact, it would be more accurate, though more complicated, to describe it as being the only member of the group, the other three, Pañjābī, Rājasthānī, and Gujarātī, being intermediate between it and the adjoining languages, Lahndā, Sindhī, and Marāṭhī, which belong to what I call the Outer Circle. These languages, Pañjābī, Rājasthānī, and Gujarātī, lie to the west and south of Western Hindī. It is also to be remembered that to its east we have Eastern Hindī, another language which is intermediate between Western Hindī and the speeches of the Outer Circle. But these two sets of intermediate languages possess sharply opposed characteristics. Their respective bases are quite different. As has been explained in the introduction to Vol. VI of this Survey, pp. 3 and ff., Eastern Hindī is a language of the Outer Circle affected by the characteristics of the Central Group, while Pañjābī, Rājasthānī, and Gujarātī are in all their chief characteristics members of the Central Group, and only show traces, which are more and more evident as we go westwards, of the influence of the Outer Circle. It would be most correct to class them as a distinct intermediate group of languages, but it is more convenient to consider them all together, with Western Hindī, as members of one group—the Central,—remembering that they do not possess all the true characteristics of that group in its purity.

The linguistic boundaries of Western Hindī are as follows :—On its north-west it is bounded by Pañjābī, to its south-west and south lies Rājasthānī, to its south-east, Marāṭhī, and to its east, Eastern Hindī. On the north it is bounded by the Indo-Aryan dialects, Jaunsārī, Garhwālī, and Kumaunī, of the lower southern slope of the Himālaya. It gradually shades off into Pañjābī, Rājasthānī, and Eastern Hindī, but there is no intermediate dialect between it and Marāṭhī. Marāṭhī nowhere merges into the languages of the Central Group, but is separated from them by a sharp distinct line

There are, it is true, a few tribal dialects which possess the characteristics of both Western Hindī and Marāṭhī, but these are mere mechanical mixtures—broken jargons,—which are not true intermediate forms of speech. We may consider Marāṭhī as being fully established in the Nāgpur plain at the foot of the Satpura Range. The northern hill dialects are described in Part IV of this volume, and are closely connected with Rājasthānī.

Two characters are employed for writing Western Hindī,—the Persian for some forms of Hindōstānī, and the Dēvanāgarī (with its current hands the Kaithī and Mahājānī) for the other dialects. Neither of them need be described here. In writing the dialects in the Dēvanāgarī character, an important irregularity is observed in the employment of the letter र ra. When this is followed, in Tadbhava words, by the letter य ya or व va, it does not take the form ^२. Such compounds are written र्य rya and र्व rva, respectively. Thus (Braj Bhākhā) मार्यो māryō, struck ; Bundēlī र्वो rwābō (Hindōstānī rōnā), to weep.

The familiar Hindōstānī grammar may be taken as the standard of the grammars of all the Western Hindī dialects. Each is fully described in the proper place, and I here content myself with pointing out one characteristic in which Western Hindī is pre-eminently typical of the Central Group of language. This is the analytic method of its construction, which will be dealt with at some length in the first volume of this Survey, and is only referred to here. Of all the languages of the group, Western Hindī is that which carries analysis to its furthest extreme. Its standard dialect has only one true tense (the present subjunctive) for its verb, and has only one true case (the so-called oblique form) for its nouns. Nearly all the other accidents of time and relation are expressed by the aid of participles, auxiliary verbs, or postpositions.

The earliest date which Yule gives of the use of the word 'Hindōstānī' is 1616 when Terry speaks of Tom Coryate being proficient in 'the Indostan, or more vulgar language.'¹ We may also note that Terry, in his A Voyage to East India (1655), gives a brief description of the vulgar tongue of the country of Indostan, which will be found quoted below under J. Ogilby. So Fryer (1673) (quoted by Yule) says: 'The Language at Court is Persian, that commonly spoken is Indostan (for which they have no proper character, the written Language being called Banyan).' It is evident, therefore, that early in the 17th century it was known in England that the Lingua Franca of India was this form of speech. On the other hand, another set of authorities stated that the Lingua Franca of India was Malay. So Ogilby in the passages quoted below. Again, David Wilkins, in the preface to Chamberlayne's collection of versions of the Lord's Prayer (published 1715), explains that he could not get a version in the Bengali language, as that form of speech was dying out, and was being superseded by Malay. He therefore, for Bengali, gave a Malay version, written in the Bengali character.

It is possible that Ogilby had less excuse than appears for his mistake, for Mr. Quaritch, in his Oriental Catalogue published in 1887, mentions a MS. Dictionary then in his possession (No. 34,724 in the Catalogue)¹ which he doubtfully dates as 'Surat, about 1630.' This is a Dictionary of Persian, Hindōstānī, English, and Portuguese, and he describes it as 'a great curiosity as being the first work of its kind. It was probably compiled for the use of the English factory at Surat. The Persian is given in Native and in Roman letters, the Hindōstānī in Gujarātī and Roman letters.' It is a small folio manuscript on Oriental tinted paper.

The celebrated traveller Pietro Della Valle arrived at Surat early in 1623, and remained in India till November 1624, his head-quarters being Surat and Goa. His Indian Travels were published in 1663,² and he has the honour of being the first to mention the Nāgarī, or, as he calls it, Naghèr, alphabet in Europe. He also mentioned a language which was current all over India, like Latin in Europe, and which was written in that character.³ This is, however, probably Sanskrit, not Hindōstānī.

A Jesuits' College was founded at Agra in the year 1620, and to it, in 1653, came Father Heinrich Roth.⁴ Here he studied Sanskrit, and wrote a grammar of that language. He visited Rome in 1664, and afterwards returned to Agra, where he died in 1668. While in Rome he met Kircher, who was then in that city getting the imprimatur for his China Illustrata, and gave him information regarding the Nāgarī alphabet which he incorporated in that work. It was published at Amsterdam in 1667, and its full title was Athanasii Kircheri e Soc. Jesu CHINA Monumentis qua sacris qua profanis, nec non variis Naturae et Artis Spectaculis, aliarumque Rerum memorabilium Argumentis ILLUSTRATA. Roth's contributions (besides verbal information) consisted of a set of illustrations of the ten Avatāras of Vishṇu (nine of which have titles in both Roman and Nāgarī characters), and five plates, four of which describe the Nāgarī alphabet (Elementa Linguae Hanscret), while the fifth gives the Pater Noster and the Ave Maria in Latin, but written (incorrectly enough) in the Nāgarī character. The Pater Noster begins as follows,--यातिर् (sic) नोस्तिर की एम् इन् सेलिस्.

In 1673 John Ogilby, Cosmographer, published in London--Asia, the first Part. Being an Accurate Description of Persia, and the Several Provinces thereof. The Vast Empire of the Great Mogol, and other Parts of India; and their several Kingdoms and Regions: With the Denominations and Descriptions of the Cities, Towns, and Places of Remark therein contained. The various Customs, Habits, Religion, and Languages of the Inhabitants. Their Political Governments, and Way of Commerce. Also the Plants and Animals peculiar to each Country. Collected and translated from the most authentick Authors, and augmented with later Observations, illustrated with notes and adorned with peculiar Maps, and proper Sculptures. On pp. 59, 60, he deals with the Persian language and its three dialects, Xirazy, Rostazy, and Harmazy. On p. 129 he takes up the subject of the Malay language. He says, 'as to what concerns the Language of the Indians, it only differs in general from the Moors and the Mahometans, but they have also several different Dialects amongst themselves. Amongst all their Languages, there is none which spreads itself more than the Malayan.' He then proceeds to give a vocabulary of Malayan. He next rather wavers on this point, for (p. 134) he first quotes Pietro Della Valle to show that the same speech is used everywhere, but the written characters differ. Next, he explains on Kircher's (not Pietro Della Valle's)¹ authority that the word 'Nagher' is used as the name both of a language and of a character. He then goes on, 'According to Mr Edward Terry [see above] the Vulgar Tongue of Indostan hath great affinity with the Persian and Arabic Tongues: but is pleasanter and easier to pronounce. It is a very fluent language, expressing many things in few Words. They write and read like Us, viz from the Left to the Right Hand.' (This last remark shows that some alphabet akin to Nāgarī, and not the Persian one, is referred to.) The language of the Nobility and Courts, and of all public Businesses and Writings, is Persian, but 'Vulgar Mahumetans speak Turkish, but not so eloquently as the natural born Turks. Learned Persons, and Mahumetan Priests, speak the Arabic. But no Language extends further and is of greater Use than the Malayan The Netherlands East India Company have lately printed a Dictionary of the Common Discourse in that Tongue, as also the new Testament and other Books in the same Language. Moreover, the Holland Ministers in their several Factories in India, teach the Malayan Tongue, not only in their Churches, but Schools also.'²

In the same year we have Fryer's much more accurate statement about Indian languages already quoted.

In 1678 there appeared at Amsterdam the first volume of Henricus van Rheede tot Drakestein's³ Hortus Indicus Malabaricus adornatus per H. v. R. t. D. The introduction contains eleven lines of Sanskrit, dated, in the Nāgarī character. The date corresponds to 1675 A.D.

In Berlin in the year 1680, Andreas Müller, under the pseudonym of Thomas Ludeken, produced a collection of versions of the Lord's Prayer under the title of *Oratio Orationum. S. s. Orationis dominicæ Versiones præter authenticam fere centum, eaque longe emendatius quam antehac, et e probatissimis Autoribus potius quam prioribus Collectionibus, jamque singulâ genuinis Lingua sua Characteribus, adeoque magnam Partem ex Aere ad Editionem a Barnimo Hagio traditæ editæque a Thoma Ludekenio, Solq. March Berolini, ex Officina Rungiana, Anno 1680.*⁴ The Barnimus Hagius mentioned herein as the engraver is also a pseudonym for Müller himself. In this collection Roth's Pater Noster was reprinted as being actually Sanskrit, and not a mere transliteration of the Latin original.

In 1694 there appeared a work on Chess by Thomas Hyde, entitled Historia Shahiludii.⁵ On pp. 132-137 he gives twelve different Sanskrit words for 'elephant' engraved in Nāgarī characters.

² I am sorry that I can give no clue as to the Dutch works mentioned. Perhaps some of my readers can. Ogilby appears to have confused India Proper with the Dutch Settlements in Further India, where, of course, Malay was the Lingua Franca.

So far we have dealt only with general notices or with the accounts of the characters in which Hindōstānī is written. With the commencement of the 18th century, we find the first attempts at giving serious accounts of the language itself. According to Amaduzzi in his preface to Beligatti's Alphabetum Brammhanicum (see below), a Capuchin monk named Franciscus M. Turonensis completed at Surat, in the year 1704, a manuscript Lexicon Linguae Indostanicae, in two parts, of between four and five hundred double-columned pages each. In Amaduzzi's time it was still preserved in the library of the Propaganda in Rome, but when I searched for it there in the year 1890 it could not be found.

We now come to the first Hindōstānī grammar. John Joshua Ketelaer (also written Kōtelār, Kessler, or Kettler) was a Lutheran by religion, born at Elbingen in Prussia. He was accredited to Shāh 'Ālam Bahādur Shāh (1708-1712) and Jahāndār Shāh (1712) as Dutch envoy. In 1711 he was the Dutch East India Company's Director of Trade at Surat. He passed through Agra both going to and coming from Lahore (via Delhi), but there does not seem to be any evidence available that he ever lived there, though the Dutch Company had a Factory in that city subordinate to Surat. The mission arrived near Lahore on the 10th December 1711, returned to Delhi with Jahāndār Shāh, and finally started from that place on the 14th October 1712, reaching Agra on the 20th October. From Agra they returned to Surat. In 1716 Ketelaer had been three years Director for the Dutch Company at Surat. He was then appointed their envoy to Persia, and left Batavia in July 1716, having been thirty years in the Dutch Service or in the East Indies. He died of fever at Gambroon on the Persian Gulf on his return from Isfahan, after having been two days under arrest, because he would not order a Dutch ship to act under the Persian Governor's orders against some Arab invaders.¹ He wrote a grammar and a vocabulary of the 'Lingua hindostanica,' which were published by David Mill, in 1743, in his Miscellanea Orientalia (see below). We may assume that they were composed about the year 1715.

In the same year there appeared another collection of versions of the Lord's Prayer. Its author was John Chamberlayne. It was published at Amsterdam, and had a preface by David Wilkins, who also contributed many of the specimens. Its full title was Oratio dominica in diversas omnium fere Gentium Linguas versa et propriis cujusque Linguae Characteribus expressa, una cum Dissertationibus nonnullis de Linguarum Origine, variisque ipsarum Permutationibus. Editore Joa. Chamberlanio Anglo-Britanno, Regiae Societatis Londinensis Socio. Amstelodami, typis Guil. et David. Goerei, 1715. For our present purpose, it is sufficient to remark, with reference to this celebrated work, that it reproduces Roth's Pater Noster, but without making Müller's error of imagining it to be Sanskrit.

Maturin Veyssière LaCroze was born at Nantes in 1661. In 1697 he became librarian to the Elector at Berlin and died in that city in 1739. As librarian he kept up a voluminous correspondence on linguistic subjects with the learned men of his time, including David Wilkins, John Chamberlayne, Ziegenbalg, and T. S. Bayer. This was published after his death under the title of Thesauri Epistolici LaCroziani Ex Bibliotheca Iordaniana edidit Io. Ludovicus Vhlivs. Lipsiae, 1742. In this we find him helping Wilkins and Chamberlayne in the compilation of the Oratio Dominica just mentioned. For our present purpose, the most important letters are those to and from Theophilus Siegfried Bayer, one of the brilliant band of scholars who founded the Imperial Academy at St. Petersburg. In one of Bayer's letters (dated June 1, 1726) we find what are I believe the first words of what is intended for Hindōstānī ever published in Europe. These are the first four numerals as used by the 'Mogulenses Indi' (1=hicku; 2=guu; 3=tray; 4=tzahr), which are contained in a comparative statement of the numerals in eight languages. These numerals are, however, not really Hindōstānī. Guu is an evident misprint. The others are Lahndā or Sindhī, (1=Lahndā, hik; Sindhī, hiku; 3=Lahndā, trai; Sindhī, trē; 4=Lahndā, chār; Sindhī, chāri).¹ Two years subsequently, in the third and fourth volumes of the Transactions of the Imperial Academy (for the years 1728 and 1729, published in 1732 and 1735 respectively) we find Bayer busily deciphering the Nāgarī alphabet, first through means of a trilingual syllabary printed in China, which gave the Tibetan form of Nāgarī (Lāntshā), current Tibetan, and Manchu alphabets, and afterwards with the help of the missionary Schultze to be shortly mentioned.² Finally, in November 1731 LaCroze writes to Bayer that the character used for writing by the Marāṭhās is called 'Balabande,' which, however, he adds, hardly differs from that used by the 'Bramans' which is called 'Nagara' or 'Dewanagara.' He then proceeds to show how, in his opinion, the 'Balabande' alphabet is derived from Hebrew, basing his contention on the forms of the letters in Roth's Pater Noster as reproduced in Chamberlayne's work.

Our next stage is Mill's Dissertationes Selectae. Its full title is Davidis Millii Theologiae D. ejusdemque, nec non Antiquitatum sacrarum, & Linguarum orientalium in Academia Trajectina, Professoris ordinarii, Dissertationes selectae, varia s. Litterarum et Antiquitatis orientalis Capita exponentes et illustrantes. Curis secundis, novisque Dissertationibus, Orationibus, et Miscellaneis Orientalibus auctae. Lugduni Batavorum, 1743. To us its principal interest consists in the fact that, in the Miscellanea Orientalia, he prints Ketelaer's Hindōstānī Grammar and Vocabulary, which, as we have seen, was written about the year 1715. He also gives some plates illustrating Indian alphabets. Two illustrate the Nāgarī character, and I am not certain from where he got them. The third is taken from Bayer's essay in the Transactions of the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg, and shows the Lāntshā, ordinary Tibetan, and Manchu characters. The fourth illustrates the Bengali alphabet. The Miscellanea Orientalia are on pp. 455-622 of the work. Caput, I., De Lingua Hindustanica (pp. 455-488). Latin, Hindōstānī, and Persian Vocabulary (pp. 504-509). Etymologicum Orientale harmonicum (a comparative vocabulary of Latin, Hindōstānī, Persian, and Arabic) (pp. 510-598). Except for the plates of characters, all the Hindōstānī is in the Roman character, the body of the work being written in Latin. The spelling of the Hindōstānī words is based on the Dutch system of pronunciation. Thus, me kidā, feci; me kartsjoekas (mañ kar chukā), feci; misjae (mujhē), mihi. The use of the Perso-Arabic alphabet for writing Hindōstānī is explained. In the two test points of the accuracy of all these old grammars (the distinguishing of the singular and of the plural of the personal pronouns, and the use of nē in the agent case), Ketelaer is right in the first and wrong in the second. He recognises maī (which he spells me) and tū (toe) as singulars, and ham (ham) and tum (tom) as plurals. He has no idea of the use of nē. On the other hand, he teaches the Gujarātī use of āp to mean 'we.'

² Regarding LaCroze and Bayer, see further particulars in G. A. Grierson, J. A. S. B., Vol. LXII. (1899), pt. I. pp. 43 and ff.

Ketelaer's Grammar includes not only the Hindōstānī declensions and conjugations, but also versions of the Ten Commandments, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer in that language. His translation of the last may be given as a specimen of the earliest known translation of any European Language into Hindōstānī. It runs as follows :—

Hammare baab—Ke who asmaanmehc—Paak hoq̃ teere naom—Auwe hamko moluk teera—Hoé resja teera—Sjon asmaan ton sjimienme—Rootie hammare nethi hamkon aasde—Oor maafkaar taxier apne hamko—Sjon mafkarte apre karresdaar onkon—Nedaal hamko is was wasjeme—Belk hamko ghaskar is boerayse. Teeræ he patsjayi, soorrauri alemgiere heametme. Ammen.

In the year following the publication of Ketelaer's Grammar appeared that of the celebrated missionary Schultze, whose name has been already mentioned more than once. The full title is Viri plur. Reverendi Benjamin Schultzi Missionarii Evangelioi Grammatica Hindostanica collectis in diuturna inter Hindostanos Commoratione in justum Ordinem redactis ac larga Exemporum (sic) Luce perfusis Regulis constans et Missionariorum Usui consecrata. Edidit et de suscipienda barbararum Linguarum Cultura prefatus est D. Jo. Henr. Callenberg. Halae Saxonum, 1744 (some copies are dated 1745). Schultze was aware of the existence of Ketelaer's Grammar, and mentioned it in his preface. Schultze's Grammar is in Latin. Hindōstānī words are given in the Perso-Arabic character with transliteration. The Nāgarī character (Dewa-nāgaricæ) is also explained. He ignores the sound of the cerebral letters and (in his transliteration) of all aspirated ones. He is aware of the singular and plural forms of the personal pronouns, but is ignorant of the use of nē with the past tenses of transitive verbs.

Four years afterwards Johann Friedrich Fritz published the Sprachmeister with a preface by Schultze. Its title runs Orientalisch-und Occidentalischer Sprachmeister, welcher nicht allein hundert Alphabete nebst ihrer Aussprache, So bey denen meisten Europäisch-Asiatisch-Africanisch-und Americanischen Völckern und Nationen gebräuchlich sind, Auch einigen Tabulis polyglottis verschiedener Sprachen und Zahlen vor Augen leget, Sondern auch das Gebet des Herrn, in 200 Sprachen und Mund-Arten mit dererselben Characteren und Lesung, nach einer Geographischen Ordnung mittheilet. Aus glaubwürdigen Auctoribus zusammen getragen, und mit darzu nöthigen Kupfern versehen. Leipzig, Zufinden bey Christian Friedrich Gessnern. 1748. Fritz's book is a long way ahead of its predecessor Chamberlayne's. Part I. (pp. 1-219) gives tables of the alphabets of over a hundred different languages, with accounts of the mode of use of each. On pp. 120-122 we find described the use of the Perso-Arabic alphabet as applied to Hindōstānī. It may be noticed that all mention of the cerebral letters is omitted. On p. 123 we have the 'Devanagram,' on p. 124 the 'Balabandu,' and on pp. 125-131 the 'Akar Nagari,' which are all rightly classed together as various forms of the same alphabet, but the transliteration is often curiously incorrect. For instance, under 'Akar Nagari,' ङ is transliterated dhgja, and it is explained that an n is always sounded before it and that the j is clearly pronounced as in the Arabic ج. It will be seen that here the existence of cerebral letters is indicated. Except in the case of 'Akar Nagari,' no attempt is made to distinguish between aspirated and unaspirated letters. On p. 204 are given the Hindōstānī numerals from 1—9, and 10, 20, 30, etc., up to 90. They commence, Jek, do, tin, schahar, patsch, sche, sat, att, nau, das. Part II (pp. 1-128) contains the versions of the Lord's Prayer. On pp. 81 and 82 is given Schultze's 'Hindostanica seu Mourica seu Mogulsch' version in the Perso-Arabic character with transliteration. The latter begins, Asman-po' rahata-so hamara Bap, tumara Naun pak karna hone deo, tumari Pudaschahi ane deo, etc. The versions in the Nāgarī character are Roth's transliterated version, Sanskrit in 'Dewa-nagaram s. Hanseret,' and Bhōjpurī in 'Akar-Nagarika' (the last two by Schultze). Finally, there are comparative statements of the words for 'father,' 'heaven,' 'earth,' and 'bread' in all the languages quoted, and some other appendixes. The Hindōstānī forms of these four words are given as Bab', Asmān, Hunnia, and Rosi (sic), respectively.

Our next authority is Travels from St. Petersburg in Russia to diverse Parts of Asia. By John Bell. Glasgow, 1763. (New Edition, Edinburgh, 1806.) In Chapter 12 of this work are given the Numerals of Indostan.

Of much more importance is the Alphabetum Brammhanicum seu Indostanum Universitatis Kasī. Romae, 1761. Typis Sac. Congregationis de Propag Fide. It is by a Capuchin Missionary named Cassiano Beligatti, and is furnished with a preface by Johannes Christophorus Amadutius (Amaduzzi). In this preface there is a very complete account of the then existing knowledge regarding Indian languages. It describes Sanskrit (संस्कृत) correctly as the language of the learned, and next refers to the 'बखा बोली' or 'Beka Bolī' or common tongue which is found in the University of 'Kasī or Benarès.' It then goes on to enumerate the other principal alphabets of India which (except 'Nagrī, Nagrī Soratensis, or Balabandū') do not immediately concern us. Of more particular interest is his mention of a Lexicon Linguae Indostanicae which was composed by a Capuchin Missionary of Surat named Franciscus M. Turonensis, in the year 1704, the manuscript of which was then in the Propaganda Library in Rome, and which Amaduzzi describes at considerable length. He also mentions a manuscript dialogue (? in Hindōstānī) between a Christian and a Native of India regarding the truth of religion, which was dedicated to the Rājā of Betia, in the present district of Champaran, by Josephus M. Gargnanensis and Beligatti, the author of the work we are now describing. The Alphabetum Brammhanicum is of importance as being the first book (so far as I am aware) in which the vernacular words are printed in their own character in moveable types. But not only are the Dēvanāgarī letters represented by types, but even the Kaithī ones receive the same honour. Beligatti calls the Dēvanāgarī character the 'Alphabetum expressum in litteris Universitatis Kasī,' and after covering over a hundred pages with a minute description of its use (including the compound consonants), he goes on, on page 110, to deal with the 'Alphabetum popolare Indostanorum vulgo Nagri.' This is, he says, used by all the natives for familiar letters and ordinary books, and for all subjects, whether religious or profane, which can be written in the 'भाखा बोली bhaka boli or vulgar tongue.'¹ He then gives a good description of the Kaithi alphabet, using moveable types also here. The book concludes with an account of the numerals and with reading exercises. These last are transliterations of the Latin Pater Noster and Ave Maria into Dēva-nāgarī, followed by translations of the Invocation of the Trinity, the Lord's Prayer, the Ave Maria, and the Apostles' Creed into Hindōstānī, in the same character. Taking it altogether, the Alphabetum Brammhanicum is, for its time, a wonderfully good piece of work.

With the Alphabetum Brammhanicum the first stage of Hindōstānī Bibliography may be considered to be completed. Hadley's Grammar appeared in 1772, and was quickly followed by a number of other and better ones, such as the Portuguese Gramatica Indostana (1778: far in advance of Hadley), Gilchrist's numerous works (commencing 1787), and Lebedeff's Grammar (1801). These will all be found below, each described in its proper place. Lebedeff's work deserves more than a mere entry on account of the extraordinary adventures of its author. This remarkable man gives an account of his life in the preface of his book, from which we gather that he began his Indian career (apparently as a handmaster) in the year 1785 at Madras. After a stay there of two years he migrated to Calcutta, where he met with a Pandit who taught him Sanskrit, Bengali, and Hindōstānī (or, as he called it, the Indian mixed dialect). His next attempt was to translate two English plays into Bengali, and one of these was performed publicly with great applause (according to its author) in 1795 and again in the following year. According to Adelung,² he then became theatrical manager to the Great Mogul, and finally returned to England after a stay of more than twenty years in the East. In London he published his grammar, and made the acquaintance of Woronzow, the Russian Ambassador, who sent him to Russia. He was employed in the Russian Foreign Office and was given a large subvention towards founding a Sanskrit press. I have no knowledge of any other works from his pen. It is to be hoped, for the sake of his patrons, that his knowledge of Sanskrit and Bengali was greater than that of Hindōstānī which he displays in his grammar. Not only is its system of transliteration (kon hay hooa = who is there) detestably incorrect, but so is the whole account of the grammatical structure of the language. The concluding words of his preface show that he was not conscious of its imperfections, and at the same time throw a curious light on the morality of Europeans in India at his time. 'The Indian words in this work are . . . so well ascertained as to leave no doubt, but the European learner, with a little assistance of a Pandit or Moonshie, nay, even of a Bebee-saheb, cannot fail in a short time to obtain a knowledge of their [the natives'] idioms, and to master the Indian dialects with incredible facility.'

Finally we may briefly refer to a few belated works of the early period of inquiries into Indian languages, which appeared after Hindōstānī had begun to be seriously studied in Calcutta. In 1782 Ivarus Abel published in Copenhagen Symphona Symphona, sive undecim Linguarum Orientalium Discors exhibita Concordia Tamulicæ videlicet, Granthamicæ, Telugicæ, Sanscritamicæ, Marathicæ, Balabandicæ, Canaricæ, Hindostanicæ, Cuncanicæ, Gutzaratticæ et Peguanicæ non characteristicæ, quibus ut explicativo-Harmonica adjecta est Latine. It is a comparative vocabulary of fifty-three words in these eleven languages. The words include parts of the body, heaven, sun, etc., certain animals, house, water, sea, tree, the personal pronouns and numerals.

² Mithridates, I. 185. According to the same authority he was by birth an Ukraine peasant, and, on account of his musical talents, was taken up by Prince Rasumovsky, who carried him to Italy, where he became proficient on the violoncello. He then wandered to Paris and London, where he took service under a Lord who went to India as Governor.

In 1791 there was published in Rome an anonymous work, with a preface by Paulinus a S. Bartholomæo, entitled Alphabeta Indica, id est Granthamicum seu Sanscritamicum-Malabaricum, Indostanum sive Vanarense, Nagaricum vulgare, et Talenganicum. It is a collection of these four alphabets, all in moveable types.

Johann Christoph Adelung's Mithridates oder allgemeine Sprachenkunde mit dem Vater Unser als Sprachprobe in bey nahe fünfhundert Sprachen und Mundarten may be taken as the link between the old philology and the new. A philologist so eminent as this great writer could not fail to adorn whatever linguistic subject he touched, and, for its time, this work is a marvel of erudition and masterly arrangement. So far as Indian languages go, it sums up all (little it must be confessed) that was known about them at the end of the 18th century. In it 'Mongolisch-Indostanisch oder Mohrisch' (i.e., Urdū) (Vol. I. pp. 183 and ff.) and 'Rein oder Hoch-Indostanisch, Dewa Nagara' (pp. 190 and ff.) are jointly described as the 'Allgemeine Sprachen in Indostan.' By 'Rein oder Hoch-Indostanisch' are meant the various 'Hindī' dialects spoken between Mathura and Patna, but as an example is given the Lord's Prayer in badly spelt Sanskrit. It is contributed by Schultze, whose nationality apparently prevented him from distinguishing between bh and p. For instance, he spells bhōjanam 'podsanam.' Vol IV of the work consists of additions and corrections, and of a supplement by J. S. Vater. Further information regarding Hindōstānī will be found on pp 58-63, 83 (relationship of Hindōstānī to Romani), and 486 of that volume.

Of the dialects of Western Hindī, Braj Bhākhā and Hindōstānī are those which have received most literary culture. Kanauji is so like Braj Bhākhā, that it hardly deserves separate mention. I only refer to it as its separate existence is popularly recognised. Some few works have been written in Bundēlī, but none of them have been critically edited. Indeed, this important dialect has been almost entirely ignored by students. Even Dr. Kellogg does not describe it in his Grammar. Kanaūjī and Bundēlī are therefore hardly mentioned in this bibliography. Nearly all the entries refer either to Braj Bhakhā or to one or other of the various forms of Hindōstānī.

The following Bibliography is divided into four sections :—

I.—General.—This deals with works giving a general account of the language or of one or more of its dialects, including works dealing with the subject from the point of view of comparative philology.

II.—Grammars, Dictionaries, and other helps to the student.—I have endeavoured to make this as complete as possible up to the date of the Mutiny. After that I have selected, perhaps in a somewhat arbitrary fashion.

III.—Selections, Collections of Scattered Pieces, and Collections of Proverbs.—This includes some Readers put together mainly for students.

IV.—Texts.—Here, with a few exceptions, I have confined myself to works which have been more or less critically edited by European scholars. It would have been impossible to enumerate the huge mass of texts which have issued without any attempt at editing from the native presses of India. For them, the reader can consult Mr. Blumhardt's Catalogues of Hindōstānī and Hindī works in the British Museum Library, and of the same in the India Office Library. These are all published separately, and can be obtained at a moderate price. To this section I have added an appendix giving a list of early translations of the Scriptures into the various dialects of Western Hindī.

In each of the first three sections, all the works of one writer are grouped together, and each writer is arranged in order of the date of the first work mentioned under his name. In the fourth section writers are arranged alphabetically.

In the following lists I have taken special care to include everything written by Garcin de Tassy. In this respect I have to acknowledge the assistance which has been kindly rendered to me by Monsieur J. Vinson. With his help I trust that I have been able to offer a not unworthy tribute to the memory of the great French scholar.—

INSHĀ ALLĀH KHĀN, CALLED INSHĀ,—Kulliyāt-e Inshā Allāh Khān. The complete works. Delhi, 1855; Lucknow, 1876.

A Tale by Inshā Allāh Khān. Communicated and translated by L. Clint, Esq., Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. XXI (1852), pp. 1 and ff. Continuation, translated by the Rev. S. Slater, Vol. XXIV (1855), pp. 79 and ff. (This is the celebrated tale commonly called 'Kahānī phēph Hindī-mē,' which has frequently appeared in Indian School-books such as

- 'Gurkz.' Its value consists in its style, which, though pure and elegant Urdū and fully intelligible to the Musalmāns of Delhi and Lucknow, does not contain a single Persian word. On the other hand, it is equally free from the Sanskritisms of Paydits. The idiom (including the order of the words) is distinctly that of Urdū, not of Hindi. In this last respect, it differs from the work of Ayodhyā Singh Upādhyāy, in which the order of words is that usual in Hindi.

HINDŌSTĀNĪ.

‘It is sheer pedantry—nay, a misconception of the laws which govern language as a living organism—to despise pithy and apt colloquialisms, and even slang. In order to remain healthy and vigorous, a literary language must be rooted in the soil of a copious vernacular, from which it can extract and assimilate, by a chemistry peculiar to itself, whatever nourishment it requires. It must keep in touch with life in the broadest acceptation of the word; and life at certain levels, obeying a psychological law which must simply be accepted as one of the conditions of the problem, will always express itself in dialect, provincialism, slang.’—W. ARCHER in the Pall Mall Magazine for October 1899.

As a dialect of Western Hindī, Hindōstānī presents itself under several forms. These may first of all be considered under two heads, viz. Vernacular Hindōstānī, and the Literary Hindōstānī founded thereon. Vernacular Hindōstānī is the language of the Upper Gangetic Doab and of Western Rohilkhand. Literary Hindōstānī is the polite speech of India generally, and may be taken as the vernacular of educated Musalmāns throughout northern India, and of all Musalmāns south of the Narbada. Being derived from, and still having its roots in, vernacular Hindōstānī, it would be more logical to treat the latter first, but considerations of convenience lead us to reverse the process. Literary Hindōstānī is so widely known, and of such importance, that it must necessarily be taken as the standard dialect of Western Hindī. Its grammar and its various standards of literary style are fixed, and present a suitable form with which to compare the different vernaculars on which it is based, or to which it is related. I therefore commence by describing Literary Hindōstānī.

The following is the approximate number of speakers of the two main divisions of Hindōstānī,—the vernacular, and the literary form of speech—

Literary Hindōstānī,¹ Urdū, and Hindī.

The word ‘Hindōstān’ is Persian by origin, and means literally ‘the country of the Hindōs or Hindūs.’ By it Indian writers connote the country between the Punjab on the west, Bengal on the east, the Himalayas on the north, and the Vindhya on the south. It includes the

¹ The name is ‘Hindōstānī’, not ‘Hindūstānī’ as commonly written. All the early European writers spelt it correctly with o, not u. The word rhymes in Persian and Urdū poetry with dōstān and bōstān and the vowel of the second syllable is consequently ō, not u; even the word now more generally pronounced Hindū should correctly be Hindō and is often to be heard so pronounced in India (where the distinction between ū and ō, lost in Erān, still survives) by accurate reciters of Persian poetry. Hindō represents an earlier Hindau, being the modern Persian for the ancient Hendava, i.e., a dweller in the country of the hapta hindu (Sanskrit, sapta sindhu) or ‘seven rivers’ now called, with the omission of two (probably the Saraswati and Drishadvati or Ghaggar), the ‘Panj-āb.’ See Lyall, Sketch of the Hindustani Language, p. 1. Sir Charles Lyall has drawn my attention to the following verse by Sa’dī, Bōstān (ed. Graf, Maqaddimah 127):—

کل آرد سعدی سوي بستان
بشرفي و نقل بهندستان

‘Sa’dī has shamelessly brought a rose to the garden and pepper to India,’ i.e., he has brought coals to Newcastle.

ancient Madhyadēśa or Midland of Sanskrit geography, but extends far beyond it to the east.¹

The word 'Hindōstānī' was coined under European influence, and means the language of Hindōstān. It thus connotes much more than it literally signifies, for, besides Hindōstānī, three other languages, Bihārī, Eastern Hindī, and Rājasthānī, are spoken in Hindōstān, a tract inhabited by about ninety millions of people, and as large as Germany, France, and Spain combined. Even in the tract in which Western Hindī is a vernacular, and of which Hindōstānī may be considered as the standard literary dialect, it is only spoken as a general vernacular in a comparatively small area in the north-western corner.

The earliest writers on India (such as Terry and Fryer) called the current language of India 'Indostan.' In the early part of the eighteenth century writers alluded in Latin to the Lingua Indostanica, Hindustanica, or Hindostanica. The earliest English writers in India called the language 'Moors,' and it appears to be Gilchrist who about 1787 first coined the word 'Hindōstānī' or, as he spelt it, 'Hindoostance.'² Literary Hindōstānī, as distinct from vernacular Hindōstānī, is current, in various forms, as the language of polite society, and as a lingua franca over the whole of India proper. It is also a language of literature, both poetical and prose.

As most of those who possess the power of speaking it use it as a second language, in addition to their own vernaculars, it is impossible to give more than an approximate number of the speakers amongst whom it is current. It is true that, especially in the larger cities, the Urdū form of Hindōstānī is the only vernacular of educated Musalmāns, but no figures are available for distinguishing these from the large number of people who are bilingual. Only for the Dakhinī form of Hindōstānī are approximately correct figures available.

The following table shows, province by province, the best estimate which I can put together of the number of people who speak Literary Hindōstānī, in some form, or other, by preference. I exclude from it the speakers of Vernacular Hindōstānī who inhabit the Upper Doab and West Rohilkhand, and also all speakers of other dialects of Western Hindī such as Bundēlī, Kanaujī, Braj, or Bāngarū. The figures for Dakhinī are given as a total, the details being given later on, province by province, when we come to consider that form of speech more particularly. The figures for Assam, Bengal, the United Provinces, Rajputana, Central India, Ajmere-Merwara and Kashmir, are estimates based on returns supplied for the Survey. The others are based on the Census figures for 1891, after making the necessary adjustments.

In Bombay, I have taken the Hindōstānī of Gujarat and Sindh as Literary Hindōstānī, and that of the rest of the presidency as Dakhinī.

² Fergusson in 1773 published a Dictionary of the Hindostan Language. For further particulars on this subject see the Bibliography, ante.

As already stated, Literary Hindōstānī is based on the vernacular Hindōstānī spoken in the Upper Doab and in Western Rohilkhand. It grew up as a lingua franca in the polyglot bazaar attached to the Delhi court, and was carried everywhere in India by the lieutenants of the Mughul Empire. Since then its seat has been secure. It has been adopted as the language which every follower of Islām (the religion of the Emperors) speaks if he can, and its simple grammar and enormous vocabulary have rendered it able to fill the need which has always been felt in such a polyglot tract as India for a lingua franca. It has also received, in at least two of its forms, considerable literary cultivation.²

It has several recognised varieties, amongst which may be mentioned Urdū, Rākhta, Dakhinī, and Hindī. Urdū is that form of Hindōstānī which is written in the Persian character, and which makes a free use of Persian (including Arabic) words in its vocabulary. The name is said to be derived from the Urdū-e mu'alla or royal military bazaar outside the Delhi palace. It is spoken chiefly in the towns of Western Hindostan, by Musalmāns and by Hindūs who have fallen under the influence of Persian culture. Persian vocables are, it is true, employed in every form of Hindōstānī. Such have been admitted to full citizenship even in the rustic dialects, or in the elegant Hindī of modern writers like Harishchandra of Benares. To object to their use would be affected purism, just as would be the avoidance of the use of all words of Latin derivation in English. But in what is known as High Urdū the use of Persian words is carried to almost incredible extremes. In writings of this class we find whole sentences in which the only Indian thing is the grammar, and with nothing but Persian words from beginning to end. It is curious, however, that this extreme Persianisation of Hindōstānī is not, as Sir Charles Lyall rightly points out, the work of conquerors ignorant of the tongue of the people. On the contrary, the Urdū language took its rise in the efforts of the ever pliable Hindū to assimilate the language of his rulers. Its authors were Kāyasths and Khatris employed in the administration and acquainted with Persian, not Persians or Persianised Turks, who for many centuries used only their own language for literary purposes.¹ To these is due the idea of employing the Persian character for their vernacular speech, and the consequent preference for words to which that character is native. 'Persian is now no foreign idiom in India, and though its excessive use is repugnant to good taste, it would be a foolish purism and a political mistake to attempt (as some have attempted) to eliminate it from the Hindū literature of the day.' I have made this quotation from Sir Charles Lyall's work, in order to show what an accomplished scholar has to say on one side of a much debated question. That the general principle which he has enunciated is the correct one I think no one will dispute. Once a word has become domesticated in Hindōstānī no one has any right to object to its use whatever its origin may be, and opinions will only differ as to what words have received the right of citizenship and what have not. This, after all, is a question of style, and in Hindōstānī, as in English, there are styles and styles. For myself, I far prefer the Hindōstānī from which words whose citizenship is in any way doubtful are excluded, but that, I freely admit, is a matter of taste.

¹ Most of these are probably speakers of Dakhinī, but no certain information is available.

² It will be noticed that this account of Hindōstānī and its origin differs widely from that which has been given hitherto by most authors (including the present writer), which was based on Mīr Amman's preface to the 'Bagh o Bahār.' According to him Urdū was a mongrel mixture of the languages of the various tribes who flocked to the Delhi bazaar. The explanation given above was first put forward by Sir Charles Lyall in the year 1880, and the Linguistic Survey has shown the entire correctness of his view. Hindōstānī is simply the vernacular of the Upper Doab and Western Rohilkhand, on which a certain amount of literary polish has been bestowed, and from which a few rustic idioms have been excluded.

Rēkhṭa (i.e. 'scattered' or 'crumbled') is the form which Urdū takes when used for poetry. The name is derived from the manner in which Persian words are 'scattered' through it. When poems are written in the special dialect used by women, which has a vocabulary of its own, it is known as Rēkhṭī.²

Dakhinī³ is the form of Hindōstānī used by Musalmāns in the Deccan. Like Urdū it is written in the Persian character, but is much more free from Persianisation. It uses grammatical forms (such as mērē-kō for mujh-kō) which are common in rustic parts of Northern India, but which are not found in the literary dialect, and in the Southern Deccan it does not use the agent case with nē before transitive verbs in the past tense, which is a characteristic feature of all the dialects of Western Hindostan.

² It is hardly necessary to point out that much of the preceding account of Urdū is based on Sir Charles Lyall's 'Sketch of the Hindustani Language.'

³ Dakhinī is separately described on pp. 58 and ff.

The word 'Hindī' is used in several different meanings. It is a Persian, not an Indian word, and properly signifies a native of India, as distinguished from a 'Hindū' or non-Musalmān Indian.

Hindī.

Thus Amīr Khusrau says, 'whatever live Hindū fell into the King's hands was pounded to death under the feet of elephants. The Musalmāns who were Hindīs had their lives spared.' In this sense (and in this way it is still used by natives) Bengali and Marāthi are as much Hindī as the language of the Doab. On the other hand, Europeans use the word in two mutually contradictory senses, viz. sometimes to indicate the Sanskritised, or at least the non-Persianised, form of Hindōstānī, which is employed as a literary form of speech by Hindūs, and which is usually written in the Nāgarī character: and sometimes, loosely, to indicate all the rural dialects spoken between Bengal proper and the Panjab. In the present pages, I use it only in the former sense. This Hindī, therefore, or, as it is sometimes called, 'High Hindī', is the prose literary language of those Hindūs of Upper India who do not employ Urdū. It is of modern origin, having been introduced under English influence at the commencement of the last century. Up till then, when a Hindū wrote prose and did not use Urdū, he wrote in his own local dialect, Awadhī, Bundēli, Braj Bhākhā, or what not. Lallū Lāl, under the inspiration of Dr. Gilchrist, changed all this by writing the well-known Prēm Sāgar, a work which was, so far as the prose portions went, practically written in Urdū, with Indo-Aryan words substituted wherever a writer in that form of speech would use Persian ones. It was thus an automatic reversion to the actual vernacular of the Upper Doab. The course of this novel experiment was successful from the start. The subject of the first book written in it attracted the attention of all good Hindūs, and the author's style, musical and rhythmical as the Arabic saj', pleased their ears. Then, the language fulfilled a want. It gave a lingua franca to the Hindūs. It enabled men of widely different provinces to converse with each other without having recourse to the (to them) unclean words of the Musalmāns. It was easily intelligible everywhere, for its grammar was that of the language which every Hindū had to use in his business relations with Government officials, and its vocabulary was the common property of all the Sanskritic languages of Northern India. Moreover, very little prose, excepting commentaries and the like, had been written in any modern Indian vernacular before. Literature had almost entirely confined itself to verse. Hence the language of the Prēm Sāgar became, naturally enough, the standard of Hindū prose all over Hindostan, from Bengal to the Panjab, and has held its place as such to the present day. Now-a-days no Hindū of Upper India dreams of writing in any language but Hindī or Urdū when he is writing prose; but when he takes to verse, he at once adopts one of the old national dialects, such as the Awadhī of Tulsi Dās or the Braj Bhākhā of the blind bard of Agra. Only of very late years have attempts been made to write poems in Hindī, with, in the opinion of the present writer, but moderate success. Since Lallū Lāl's time Hindī has developed for itself certain rules of style which differentiate it from Urdū, the principal ones relating to the order of words, which is much less free than in that form of Hindōstānī. It has also, of late years, fallen under the fatal spell of Sanskrit, and is showing signs of becoming in the hands of Pandits and under the encouragement of some European writers who have learned Hindī through Sanskrit, as debased as literary Bengali, without the same excuse. Hindī has so copious a vocabulary of its own, a vocabulary rooted in the very beings of the sturdy peasantry upon whose language it is based, that nine-tenths of the Sanskrit words which one meets in most modern Hindī books are useless and unintelligible excrescences. The employment of Sanskrit words is supposed to add dignity to the style. One might as well say that a graceful girl of eighteen gained in dignity by masquerading in the furbelows of her great-grandmother. Some enlightened native scholars are struggling hard, without displaying an affected purism, against this too easily acquired infection, and we may hope that their efforts will meet with the encouragement which they deserve.

We may now define the three main varieties of Hindōstānī as follows:—Hindōstānī is primarily the language of the Upper Gangetic Doab, and is also the lingua franca of India, capable of being written in both Persian and Dēva-nāgarī characters, and without purism, avoiding alike the excessive use of either Persian or Sanskrit words when employed for literature. The name ‘Urdū’ can then be confined to that special variety of Hindōstānī in which Persian words are of frequent occurrence, and which hence can only be written in the Persian character, and, similarly, ‘Hindī’ can be confined to the form of Hindōstānī in which Sanskrit words abound, and which hence can only be written in the Dēva-nāgarī character. These are the definitions which were proposed by the late Mr. Growse, and they have the advantage of being intelligible, while at the same time they do not overlap. Hitherto, all the three words have been very loosely employed. Finally, I use ‘Eastern Hindī’ to connote the group of intermediate dialects of which Awadhī is the chief, and ‘Western Hindī’ to connote the group of dialects of which Braj Bhākhā and Hindōstānī (in its different phases) are the best known.

As a literary language, the earliest specimens of Hindōstānī are in Urdū, or rather Rēkhṭa, for they were poetical works. Its cultivation began in the Deccan at the end of the 16th century, and it received a definite standard of form a hundred years later, principally at the hand of Walī of Aurangabad, commonly called ‘the Father of Rēkhṭa.’ The example of Walī was quickly followed at Delhi, where a school of poets took its rise, of which the most brilliant members were Saudā (d. 1780, the author of the famous satires) and Mīr Taqī (d. 1810). Another school (almost equally celebrated) arose in Lucknow during the troubled time at Delhi in the middle of the 18th century. The great difference between the poetry of Urdū and that written in the various dialects of Eastern or Western Hindī lies in the system of prosody. In the former the prosody is that of the Persian language, while in the latter it is the altogether opposed indigenous system of India. Moreover, the former is entirely based on Persian models of composition, which are quite different from the older works from which the native literature took its origin. Urdū prose came into existence, as a literary medium, at the beginning of the last century in Calcutta. Like Hindī prose it was due to English influence, and to the need of text-books in both forms of Hindōstānī for the College of Fort William. The Bāgh o Bahār of Mīr Amman and the Khīrad Afrōz of Ḥafīẓu'd-dīn Aḥmad are familiar examples of the earlier of these works in Urdū, as the already mentioned Prēm Sāgar written by Lallū Lāl is an example of those in Hindī. Since then both Urdū and Hindī prose have had a prosperous course, and it is unnecessary to dwell upon the copious literature which has poured from the press during the past century. The late Sir Sayyid Aḥmad Bahādur is probably the most eminent among deceased writers of Urdū prose, while in Hindī the late Harishchandra of Benares, by universal consent, holds the first place. Hindī, of course, has no poetical literature. Urdū poetry continues to flourish.

Urdū and Hindī, as representing, each, one of the two great religious systems of India, have their headquarters wide apart. Two rival cities claim to be the true headquarters of Urdū, viz. Delhi and Lucknow. The styles of the writers of these two cities, and of their respective followers, show considerable points of difference. Putting a few matters of idiom, such as the use of the Infinitive as a Gerundive, or of certain verbs as transitive or intransitive, to one side, the main point of difference is that Lucknow Urdū is much more Persianised than the Urdū of Delhi. Lucknow writers delight in concocting sentences which, except for an auxiliary verb at the end, are throughout Persian in construction and vocabulary. Delhi Urdū, on the other hand, is more genuinely Indian. Writers are not afraid to employ a word because it is of home growth. This avoidance of pedantry had been strongly advocated by the new school of Delhi writers which has come to the front in the last twenty years of the nineteenth century, and of whom, Nazir Aḥmad, the author of several excellent novels, is the most illustrious example. The Urdū of his earlier works is remarkably clear and simple, and his writings exhibit both sturdy common-sense and a fine appreciation of humour. Other authors of this school who may be mentioned are Ḥālī, Muḥammad Ḥusain Āzād (said by some to compose the purest Urdū prose that ever was written), Ratan Nāth Sarshār, and 'Abdu'l-Ḥalīm Sharar. All these writers, whether in prose or verse, are apostles of naturalness as opposed to the artificial thought and diction of the Lucknow school.

Hindī, also, has two schools of writers—that of Agra, and that of Benares. The Hindī prose of Benares is as artificial as literary Bengali. It stands as a literary parallel to Lucknow Urdū, in avoiding the use of simple language as much as possible and in confining its vocabulary almost entirely to words borrowed directly from Sanskrit. Native Indian words are eschewed as strictly as those of Persian origin. The school of Agra, on the other hand, is not only much more free from Sanskritisms, but admits with comparative liberality foreign words which have achieved citizenship in the general vocabulary of India.

In connexion with this, it may here again be mentioned that Literary Hindōstānī is not only founded on a vernacular dialect of Western Hindī, but is still in living connexion with it. Different writers have not hesitated to employ in their works idioms borrowed from their own vernaculars, and many of these have won their way into what is the standard form of speech. Hence the literary Hindōstānī of the time of Gilchrist is very different from that employed at the present day. Idioms have fallen into disuse, and new idioms have been introduced, so that works like the Tātā Kahānī or the Bāgh o Bahār are very unsafe guides as to what is elegant modern Urdū. Many European writers have fought against this change, and have not hesitated to condemn new idioms as 'ungrammatical' or as solecisms. They forget that the works which they consider to be classics were really first attempts at writing Hindōstānī prose, and that a hundred years of practice, with an inexhaustible well of racy native idiom at hand from which to draw at will, has greatly improved a form of speech originally possessed of great capabilities. Mr. Platts was, I believe, the first to attack this too conservative method of teaching a language,—not as it is, but as the teacher thinks it ought to be. He rightly insisted that grammars written by Europeans, however scholarly, cannot be considered as the ultimate court of appeal. The jus et norma loquendi of the best writers of the time is the only criterion. The language cannot be made to fit the grammars, but the grammars must be made to fit the language.¹ It is a false purism which condemns the use of an apt expression because, although born of the soil, it has not been used by former writers.²

The particular alphabet in which Hindōstānī is written is usually a matter of religion. Musalmāns commonly employ the Persian alphabet with a few additional signs, and most Hindūs the Dēva-nāgarī or the Kaithī. Simple Hindōstānī which is neither highly Persianised nor highly Sanskritised can be, and often is, written in both alphabets. It is quite common to find a book which appeals to a large circle of readers issued in two editions, one in the Persian character for Musalmāns, and one in the Dēva-nāgarī character for Hindūs. In this respect it should be noted that many educated Hindūs, and especially Kāyasths, are equally familiar with both alphabets.

When Hindōstānī is highly Persianised, and takes the form of Urdū, the words are often so foreign in sound that they cannot be conveniently represented in the Dēva-nāgarī character. Hence Urdū is always written in the Persian character. Similarly highly Sanskritised Hindī does not lend itself to the Persian character and always appears in Dēva-nāgarī. Amongst fanatics who ought to know better, but do not wish to do so, this question of characters has unfortunately become a sort of religious shibboleth. True Hindōstānī can be written with ease in either character, and Musalmāns find it easiest to read it in the Persian and most Hindūs in the Dēva-nāgarī. But, owing to the fact that the extreme varieties of Hindōstānī on each side can only each be written in one character, these fanatics have confused alphabet with language. They say, because a thing is written in Dēva-nāgarī therefore it is Hindī, the language of Hindūs, and because a thing is written in the Persian character therefore it is Urdū, the language of Musalmāns. Nothing could be further from the truth. The written character does not make a language. If it did, when we write Hindōstānī in English characters, we should have to say it was the English language, and not Hindōstānī; but not even our fanatics would go so far as that, although that is where their arguments would logically lead them. It is necessary to mention this because the policy regarding the alphabets which are officially recognised by some of the Indian Governments has been much misrepresented. When orders were issued enjoining or permitting in certain cases the use of the Dēva-nāgarī character for official documents, a cry was raised, which misled many well-meaning Muhammadans, that the Hindī language was being introduced into our courts. Government was quite aware that Sanskritised Hindī was just as unintelligible to the masses as Persianised Urdū, and took no steps towards introducing either. All that it directed was that, without changing the language, official documents should be written in characters which would be most decipherable to those who had to read them.¹

¹ As examples of this borrowing from the vernacular dialects, I may cite the use of un-nē, instead of us-nē, to mean 'by him.' Several grammarians have exercised their ingenuity over it, and some have condemned it as wrong. It is simply the very common vernacular unē or unī, which is still retained in Dakhinī. In the literary language the n has been doubled under the influence of false analogy. Another example is the employment of kē in the sense of the dative instead of ko. All over northern India kē is frequently used for the dative, and quite properly so. As we go east it is the rule, and we never hear kō. All grammarians except Mr. Platts have tried to explain this kē as an oblique form of ko. In phrases like us-kē us-kē us-kē lagt hai, it is, as Mr. Platts points out, a dative pure and simple.

² Compare the remarks of W. Archer quoted at the head of this section.

It is unnecessary to describe the Dēva-nāgarī and Kaithī alphabets. A full account of them will be found on pp. 7 and ff. of Vol. V, Pt. II of this Survey. Nor is it required to describe the Persian Alphabet. The student will find all that he needs on this point in any Hindōstānī grammar. Suffice it to say that the signs employed for sounds peculiar to Indian languages, and not found in Persian, are ت t, ه h, د d, ذ dh, ر r and ز rh. Instead of the four dots written over each of these letters we often find a small ṭōē. Thus ط, ه, د, ذ, ر, ز.

Hindōstānī is so well-known a language that it would be waste of space to give more than the merest sketch of its grammar. I shall, however, deal at some length with what are known to Indian grammarians as the prayōgas, or 'constructions' of a verb with its subject and its object.

Hindōstānī, like every Aryan language of India, is derived from an ancient Indian dialect not unlike the old Sanskrit which we meet in the Vedic hymns. This ancient dialect became changed in the course of centuries, and we have specimens of it in various stages from about 250 B.C. down to, say, 1000 A.D. The modern vernaculars may be said to have become established on their present basis at about the latter date.

We may take Sanskrit grammar as illustrating in its main features the grammar of the ancient Indian dialect from which Hindōstānī is sprung. When we examine this grammar we find that the verb is supplied with a very complete and somewhat complicated array of tenses. The present and one form of the future tense were fairly simple. They have survived, in an abraded form, down to the present day, although the representative of the future is now-a-days excluded from literary Hindōstānī. With the past tenses it was different. Besides an Imperfect the ancient Indian dialect had three tenses which expressed past time, a perfect, and two aorists. It had also a past parti-

¹ The average native makes a business of deciphering any written document. He has first to read it,—that is the first stage,—and then he has to grasp its meaning,—that is the second, and subsequent stage. The two stages are, with the uneducated, seldom concurrent. This is illustrated by the oft repeated phrase, 'when he had read and understood' such and such a communication. Similarly the word for reading a letter to oneself is not parhānā, but parh-ānā, to read and take. It may be added that in some parts of India, the local character is employed for writing Urdu. For instance the Muhammadans of Orissa use the Oṛiā character for it.

ciple, which was always intransitive, that is to say, in the case of transitive verbs, it took a passive meaning. Thus, the past participle of the intransitive verb 'to go' was 'gone,' but that of the transitive verb 'kill,' was not 'having killed,' but was, passively, 'killed.' In the old Indian dialect, as in Sanskrit, this past participle was often used as a past tense, without employing any auxiliary verb. When its speakers wished to say 'he went,' they often said 'he gone,' and when they wished to say 'I killed him,' they often said 'he killed by me,' in which it will be seen that the participle still retains its passive sense. But there is another way of using the past participle of a neuter verb,—i.e., impersonally. When a speaker of the old Indian dialect wished to say 'he went,' he as often as not (instead of saying 'he gone') said 'it (is) gone by him.'¹

Now the true past tenses of the ancient Indian dialect had a very complicated conjugation. There were two ways of forming the perfect, and regarding the more commonly used form, even Sanskrit grammarians were not agreed as to its rules. The two aorists were still more difficult to conjugate correctly. The formation of the past participle is on the other hand simple enough. As the language developed from the ancient Indian dialect it, according to a well-known law, proceeded along the line of least resistance, and gradually abandoned the whole complicated array of past tenses and adhered solely to the employment of the past participle to express the idea connoted by a past tense. In doing so it retained all the methods of employing the past participle which existed in the old Indian vernacular, and also extended them by adding one of its own. When Hindōstānī, therefore, wishes to express the idea of 'he went,' it says either,—

1. (Actively), 'he gone,' woh chalā (Sanskrit, sa chalitah)

or

2. (Impersonally) 'by him it (is) gone,' *us-nē chalā*²
(Sanskrit, tēna chalitam)

Similarly, if it wishes to express the idea of 'I killed him,' it says either,—

3. (Passively), 'by me he (was) killed,' *māi-nē woh mārā*³
(Sanskrit, mayā sa mārītaḥ)

4. (Impersonally) 'by me with reference to him it was killed (or killing was done),' māi-nē us-kō mārā. (The Sanskrit would be mayā tasya-kṛite mārītam, but the impersonal construction with transitive verbs was not employed in Sanskrit).

The fourth is apparently a development of the modern vernacular, based on the analogy of the second—at least there is no evidence that it existed in the ancient Indian vernacular from which Hindōstānī is descended.

We thus see that there are three methods of employment of the past participle to express the past tense. Of these, one, the active one, is confined in Hindōstānī to intransitive verbs, one, the passive one, is confined to transitive verbs, and one, the impersonal one, is employed with both intransitive and transitive verbs, although literary Hindōstānī prohibits its employment with the former.

¹ It will be remembered that intransitive verbs in Latin can also be similarly employed in two ways. For 'I play,' we may say either, actively, ludo, I play, or, impersonally, ludītur a me, it is played by me.

² This second impersonal form of a neuter verb is excluded from literary Hindōstānī, but it occurs in vernacular dialects.

³ I do not pretend that this particular sentence is idiomatic Hindōstānī, but it illustrates what I want to say, and the construction would, in certain circumstances, be correct.

These three constructions (or prayōgas) are named as follows by Indian grammarians—

(1) The active construction is called the Kartari prayōga.

(2) The passive „ „ „ Karmanī „

(3) The impersonal „ „ „ Bhāvē „

One word more. The past participle is an adjective, and is therefore liable to change for gender.

In the Active construction it naturally agrees with the subject. If a man is gone, we say mard chalā, but if a woman is gone, we say 'aurat chalī.'

In the Passive construction the participle must agree in gender with what would be, in English, the object. For instance, the phrase 'the woman struck a horse' must be expressed passively by 'by the woman a horse (was) struck,' in which it is evident that the participle 'struck' must agree with 'horse,' and not with 'the woman,'—thus 'aurat-nē ghoṛā mārā.' But, 'the woman struck a mare' would be 'aurat-nē ghōṛī mārī,' in which mārī, struck, is put in the feminine to agree with 'mare.'

In the impersonal construction, the participle should, properly speaking, be in the neuter, but that distinction of gender no longer exists in literary Hindōstānī, the masculine being at the present day always substituted for it. Hence the participle is always in the masculine. Thus 'the woman struck the horse' is 'by the woman with reference to the horse it was struck (or striking was done),' 'aurat-nē ghōṛē-kō mārā;' and 'the woman struck the mare' is 'by the woman with reference to the mare striking was done,' 'aurat-nē ghōṛī-kō mārā.'

It is of great importance that this system of construction should be thoroughly mastered. Otherwise it will not be easy to understand the interlinear translations of the specimens which follow, in which all three constructions are literally translated whenever they occur.

There is no difference of importance between the declensions and conjugations used in Urdū and Hindī, respectively. Urdū often borrows Persian constructions, such as the izāfat, but these are borrowings and nothing more. Besides the difference of vocabulary, there is, however, an important point of difference in the idiom of the two forms of Hindōstānī. This consists in the order of words. In Hindī prose, which follows the almost universal rule of all Indo-Aryan dialects, the order of words is fixed, and can only be altered for the sake of emphasis. Except when the order is deliberately changed to lay stress on any particular word, it is invariably,—first, the introductory words of the sentence, such as conjunctions and the like; next, the subject; next, the indirect object with its appurtenances; then, the direct object with its appurtenances; and, last of all, the verb. Adjectives and genitives precede the words they qualify. For instance, the sentence which in English would run,—'I give John's good book to you' would run in Hindī prose,—'I you-to John's good book give.' In Urdū, on the contrary, the influence of Persian and of Semitic languages has greatly relaxed this rule. The Persian rule of order, or even the Semitic one (in which the verb precedes the subject), is often followed, and, especially, the verb is frequently moved from the end to the middle of the sentence. So important is this point of the order of words in a sentence that Hindi scholars make it a test as to whether the language of a book is Hindi or Urdū, and in one notable case—the : ṭāhānī thēṭh Hindī-mē, a work written by Inshā (see p. 35) in the last century—a book which does not contain a single Persian word from cover to cover is classed as Urdū because the writer ordered his sentences in the Persian fashion. He was a Musalmān, and could not release himself from the habit of using idioms which had been taught him by Maulavis in his school-days.

Hindŏstānī Vocabulary. The Vocabulary of Hindŏstānī falls under four heads, viz. :—

- (1) pure Hindŏstānī words ;
- (2) words borrowed from Sanskrit ;
- (3) words borrowed from Persian (including Arabic) ; and
- (4) words borrowed from other sources.

The last group may be dismissed without notice, such words exist in every language.

As regards the Persian (and Arabic) borrowings, they do not come from the old Eranian language of pre-Musalmān times (though that has also contributed a small quota), but from the Arabicised

Perso-Arabic element.

Persian of the Mughul conquerors. Thus, through Persian, the Indo-Aryan vernaculars have also received an important contribution of Arabic, and even some few Turkī, words. The influence of the Musalmān religion has opened another door for the entry of Arabic, and a few words have also been imported on the west coast from Arab traders. In the main, however, the Arabic element in all the Indian vernaculars, whether Aryan or not, came in with Persian, and as a part of that language. The pronunciation of the Persian words so imported is that of the Mughul times, and not the effeminate articulation of the land of the Lion and the Sun at the present day. The extent to which Persian has been assimilated varies greatly according to locality and to the religion of the speakers. Everywhere there are some few Persian words which have achieved full citizenship and are used by the most ignorant rustic, and we find every variation between this and the Urdū of a highly educated Muhammadan writer of Lucknow, who uses scarcely a single Indo-Aryan word except the verb at the end of his sentence. In all circumstances, however, it is the vocabulary and but rarely the syntax which is affected. Only in the Urdū of the Musalmāns do we find the Persian order of words in a sentence. There has been no other introduction of Persian construction, nor are the Arabic words inflected (except by purists) according to their own rules, but they have to conform to the grammatical system of their host.

The words borrowed from Sanskrit take two forms, according to whether they and all, or whether they are more or less mispronounced, and spelt according to the mispronunciation. Words of both classes are named Tatsamas or 'the same as "that" (i.e., Sanskrit), and European scholars have named the corrupted Tatsamas of the second class semi-Tatsamas. This borrowing has been going on for centuries, but has been carried to excess during the last hundred years.

The pure Hindŏstānī words form the backbone of the language. They are derived from the ancient Indian dialect which I have already Taddhavas.

mentioned as akin to classical Sanskrit. This ancient language passed through various stages and ultimately became Hindŏstānī, just as Latin passed through various stages and became Italian, French, etc. After the ancient Indian dialect had lost its pristine form, and before it finally became Hindŏstānī, it passed through what is known as the Prakrit stage. If we borrow the terms of blood relationship, we may say that the ancient Indian dialect and classical Sanskrit were brothers; that Prakrit was the son of the ancient Indian dialect, and the nephew of Sanskrit; and that Hindōstānī is the grandson of the ancient Indian dialect, and the grand-nephew of Sanskrit. Words borrowed by Hindōstānī direct from Sanskrit are therefore grand-uncles of the genuine Hindōstānī words, descended through Prakrit from the ancient Indian dialect, although we often meet them side by side in the same sentence. Nay, we sometimes find a grand-uncle and his own grand-nephew on the same page.¹ These genuine Hindōstānī words are called, by native scholars, tadbhavas or 'Having "that" (i.e., Sanskrit, or, rather, its brother the ancient Indian dialect) for their origin.' We thus find that the Indian element of the vocabulary of Hindōstānī is made up of tadbhavas with a mixture, varying in amount, of tatsamas.

To take examples, the modern vernacular word ājñā, a command, is a Tatsama loan-word borrowed direct from classical Sanskrit. Its semi-Tatsama form, which we meet in some languages, is āgyā, and one of its Tadbhava forms is the Hindī ān, derived immediately from the Prakrit āṇā. So also, rājā, a king, is a Tatsama, but rāy or rāo is a Tadbhava. Of course complete triplets or pairs of every word are not in use. Frequently only a Tatsama or a Tadbhava occurs by itself. Sometimes we even find the Tatsama and the Tadbhava forms of a word both in use, but each with a different meaning. Thus, there is a classical Sanskrit word vaṃśa, which means both 'family' and 'bamboo,' and connected with it we find in Hindī the semi-Tatsama bans, meaning 'family,' and the Tadbhava bāṣ, meaning 'a bamboo.'²

We thus see that for many hundred years classical Sanskrit has been exercising, and is still exercising, a potent influence on the vocabularies of Hindōstānī. It is only upon the vocabulary that its influence has been directly felt. The grammar shows little (if any) traces of it. This has continued steadily in the course of its development since the earliest times. The influence of Sanskrit may have retarded this development, and probably did so in some cases, but it never stopped it, and not one single Sanskrit grammatical form has been added to the living grammar of Hindōstānī in the way that Sanskrit words have been added to its vocabulary. Nay, more, all these borrowed Tatsamas are treated by Hindōstānī exactly as other borrowed foreign words are treated, and very rarely change their forms in the processes of grammatical accidence. For instance, ghōṛā, a horse, has an oblique form ghōṛē, because it is a Tadbhava, but rājā, a king, never changes in the oblique cases, because, and only because, it is a Tatsama. Now in all the modern Indo-Aryan vernaculars the verb must change its form in the processes of conjugation, while nouns are not necessarily changed in the course of declension. Hence Tatsamas are as a rule never treated as verbs. If it is found necessary to do so, it must be done with the help of another Tadbhava verb. For instance, the word darśan, seeing, is a Tatsama, and if we wish to use it in the phrase 'he sees,'

² Tatsamas and Tadbhavas occur also in European languages. Thus, 'lapse' in 'lapse calamit' is a Tatsama, and 'lapse' is a semi-Tatsama, both meaning 'a falling,' while 'lap' is the Tadbhava form of the word, with the different meaning of 'the hanging part of a garment.' Similarly 'fragile' and 'redemption' are semi-Tatsamas, while 'frail' and 'ransom' are the corresponding Tadbhavas.

we cannot say darśanē, but must employ the periphrasis darśan karē, he does seeing. On the other hand, in all the modern vernaculars nouns need not be declined synthetically. Borrowed nouns can always be declined analytically. Hence Tatsama nouns (which are necessarily declined analytically) are common, and, in the high literary styles of all the vernaculars, very common. Thus, although there are sporadic exceptions to the broad rule, it may be laid down as a universal law that Indo-Aryan vernacular nouns may be either Tatsamas (including semi-Tatsamas) or Tadbhavas, but that Indo-Aryan vernacular verbs must be Tadbhavas.

During the last century, the introduction of printing and the spread of education has, in the case of some modern Indo-Aryan languages, introduced a fashion of using Tatsamas in comparison with which the wildest Johnsonese may almost be considered to be a specimen of pure Saxon English. It has been proved, for instance, by actual counting that in a modern Bengali work 88 per cent. of the words used were pure Sanskrit, every one of which was unnecessary and could have been represented by a vocable of true home growth. In such cases the result has been most lamentable. The vernacular has been split into two sections—the tongue which is understood of the people, and the literary dialect, known only through the press, and not intelligible to those who do not know Sanskrit.¹ Literature has thus been divorced from the great mass of the population, and to the literary classes this is a matter of small moment, for ‘this people, who knoweth not the law, are cursed.’

Although Bengali displays the greatest weakness in this respect, and has lost all power of ever developing a vigorous literature, racy of the soil, until some great genius rises and sweeps away the enchantment under which it labours, other Indian vernaculars, especially Hindī, show signs of falling under the same malignant spell. The centre of Hindī literature is naturally Benares, and Benares is in the hands of the Sanskritists. There is no necessity, as may have existed in the case of Bengali, for Hindī to have recourse to the classical tongue. In themselves, without any extraneous help whatever, the dialects from which it is sprung are, and for five hundred years have been, capable of expressing with crystal clearness any idea which the mind of man can conceive. It has an enormous native vocabulary, and a complete apparatus for the expression of abstract terms. Its old literature contains some of the highest flights of poetry and some of the most eloquent expressions of religious devotion which have found their birth in Asia. Treatises on philosophy and on rhetoric are found in it, in which the subject is handled with all the subtilty of the great Sanskrit writers, and this with hardly the use of a Sanskrit word. Yet in spite of Hindī possessing such a vocabulary and a power of expression scarcely inferior to that of English, it has become the fashion of late years to write books, not to be read by the millions of Upper India, but to display the author's learning to a comparatively small circle of Sanskrit-knowing scholars. Unfortunately, the most powerful English influence has during this period been on the side of the Sanskritists. This Sanskritised Hindī has been largely used by missionaries, and the translations of the Bible have been made into it. The few native writers who have stood up for the use of Hindi undefiled have had small success in the face of so potent an example of misguided efforts. Arguments may be brought forward in favour of using classical Sanskrit words for expressing technical terms in science and art, and I am willing to admit their truth. I am not one of those who (to quote a well-known example) prefer 'the unthoroughness of stuff' to 'the impenetrability of matter,' but there the borrowing from the parent language should stop. There is still time to save Hindi from the fate of Bengali, if only a lead is taken by writers of acknowledged repute, and much can be done in this direction by the use of a wise discretion on the part of the educational authorities of the provinces immediately concerned.

Very similar remarks apply, mutatis mutandis, to that form of Urdū which is overloaded with Persian words. The Hindōstānī of Musalmāns will always differ in its vocabulary from that of Hindūs, but this is no reason for overloading a naturally facile and elegant form of speech with hundreds of exotic expressions which are unintelligible to nine-tenths of the author's co-religionists. Urdū can be simple and Urdū can be pedantic. The simple belongs to India, the pedantic is an imitation of the language of a foreign country. There should be no hesitation in the choice made by a patriotic Indian Musalmān.

After the foregoing general remarks it will suffice to give the annexed brief summary of the main heads of Hindōstānī grammar. It will be remarked that in Urdū the so-called imperfect^a, which has been carefully recorded in all the vernacular specimens in the Dēva-nāgarī character, is omitted. This is the usual method of writing Urdū. For instance, the word meaning 'to see' would be देखना dēkh'nā in Hindī, but دیکھنا dēkh'nā in Urdū. This principle is followed in all the specimens of literary Hindōstānī. The imperfect letter is also omitted in the skeleton grammar.

DAKHINĪ HINDŌSTĀNĪ OR MUSALMĀNĪ.

The Musalmān armies imposed their language on their co-religionists in the Deccan from the first. At the present day, whether the language of the country is Marāthī, Tamil, Telugu, or some other Dravidian form of speech, the Musalmāns of southern India all employ that form of Hindōstānī, commonly known as Dakhinī, the language of the Deccan, or as Musalmānī, the language of Musalmāns. It was in the Deccan that Hindōstānī, under the form of Urdū, first received cultivation, and it was at the hands of Walī of Aurangabad (cir. 1700), the 'Father of Rēkhta,' that a standard of literary form was given to it. Walī's example was followed at Delhi, and from thence the poetical literature of Urdū spread over northern India. One result of its Deccan origin is that, even at the present day, we find, in Urdū poetry written in the north, idioms peculiar to Dakhinī that do not appear in standard prose.

It is commonly said that Dakhinī is a corrupt Hindōstānī. Historically speaking it would almost be truer to say that literary Hindōstānī is a corrupt Dakhinī, for we have seen that Hindōstānī literature took its origin in the Deccan. Without, however, going so far as that, it is not correct to look upon Dakhinī as a corrupt form of speech. The Musalmān armies carried vernacular Hindōstānī to the south before it had been standardised, and it then contained many idioms which are now excluded from literary prose. Some of these have survived in the Deccan. Such are, for instance, the employment of the oblique genitive as a base for declension in phrases like mērē-kū, to me, where the standard would have mujh-kō. Again, the oblique plural in ā survives to the present day in the Vernacular Hindōstānī and in Dakhinī, but is excluded from Urdū prose. So also the nasalization of the infinitive, as in mārnā̃, to strike, is only a survival of the old neuter gender, which has disappeared in the modern literary languages, but is still common in the dialects. Other similar examples will be noted as they occur in the following pages.

Only in one respect can Dakhinī be called a corrupt language. In Madras and the south of the Bombay Presidency, no doubt under the influence of the surrounding Dravidian languages, the passive construction of the past tense of transitive verbs has been abandoned. Transitive and intransitive verbs are now treated in exactly the same way, and though the subject is occasionally put into the agent case with nē, the nē is altogether neglected as a factor in the idiom, and the verb agrees in number and gender with the subject (although in the agent case), and not with the object. In Central Bombay, on the other hand, the presence of Marāthī has prevented the proper employment of the agent case from disappearing.

We may roughly take the Satpura Hills, south of the Nerbada valley, as the boundary between Dakhinī Hindōstānī, as a recognised literary form of speech, and the standard Hindōstānī of Delhi and Lucknow. Taking the figures of the Census of 1891 as our basis, we may consider the following to be the approximate number of those who speak it.

The Authorities which deal with Dakhinī are included in the General Bibliography of Western Hindī. I here give a brief account of the main points in which the dialect differs from standard Hindōstānī.

Authorities, Grammar.

DECLENSION.

Nouns.—The oblique form singular is formed as in standard Urdū. The nominative and oblique plural are often formed differently. The common rule is that the nominative plural usually ends in ē or ā, and the oblique plural in ō or yaū. Sometimes ō is used for the nominative plural, and ā for the oblique plural.

The following are examples:—

| Nom. Sing. | Obl. Sing. | Nom. Plur. | Obl. Plur. |
|--------------------------------|----------------|----------------|------------------|
| piyalā , a cup | piyalē | piyalē | piyalō |
| andēshā , thought | andēshē | andēshē | andēshyaō |
| ghōṛā , a horse | ghōṛē | ghōṛē | ghōṛō |
| kauwā , a crow | kauwē | kauwē | kauwyaō |
| baniyā , a trader | baniyē | baniyē | baniyō |
| āshnā , an acquaintance | āshnā | āshnāō | āshnāō |
| dānā , a sage | dānā | dānāyā | dānāyō |

¹ Many of these speak the standard form of Hindōstānī, but it is impossible to separate them out.

The usual postpositions are :—

|-------------------|---|
| Agent | nē, nī. |
| Dative-Accusative | kū, kū, kō, kē-tāi, katai, kanē , to or for. |
| Ablative | sū, sū, sō, sō, sē, sē, satī , from, by. |
| Genitive | kā, (kē, kī) (as in the Standard). |
| Locative | mē, mō, in ; pō, pa, par , on. |

Pronouns.—The following are the first two personal pronouns :—

| | First Person. | Second Person. |
|------------|---|---|
| Sing. Nom. | mai | tū, tū, tāi. |
| Gen. | mērā (-rē, -rī), mujh, muj | tērā (-rē, -rī), tujh, tuj. |
| Acc. Dat. | mujhē, mujē, munjē, mujh-kū, mērē-kanē , etc. | tujhē, tujē, tujh-kū, tērē-kanē , etc. |
| Obl. | mujh, muj, mērē | tujh, tuj, tērē. |
| Plur. Nom. | ham, hamē, hamō, hamārā | tum, tumē, tumē, tumhē, tumhō. |
| Gen. | hamārā (-rē, -rī), hamārā (-rē, -rī), haman. | tumārā (-rē, -rī), tumārā (-rē, -rī), tuman, tum. |
| Acc. Dat. | hamē, hamnā, ham-kū, haman-kū, hamō-kū, hamārē-kanē , etc. | tumhē, tumnā, tum-kū, tuman-kū, tumhō-kū, tumārē-kanē , etc. |
| Obl. | ham, haman, hamnā, hamō, hamārē. | tum, tuman, tumnā, tumhō, tumārē. |

The forms which differ from the standard should not be considered corruptions. They all occur in various dialects of Western Hindī and were brought down to the Deccan before Urdū was standardised. Special attention may be drawn to the employment of the oblique form of the genitive as a general oblique base. Although this is almost totally excluded from standard Urdū, it is common in all the vernacular dialects of northern Hindostan. The forms hamnā and tumnā are oblique forms of haman and tuman, respectively, and point to Rājasthānī influence.

The Demonstrative Pronouns, including the Pronoun of the third person, are,—

| Sing. | This. | That, he, she, it. |
|-----------|---|---|
| Nom. | ē, yē, yō, yeh, inē, ī | ō, wō, woh, unē, ū |
| Acc. Dat. | isē, is, is-kū , etc. | usē, us, us-kū |
| Obl. | is , (as an adjective, also) yē | us. |
| Plur. | | |
| Nom. | in, inū, inū, inō, inhē | un, unū, unū, unō, unhē, wē, ō, woh, |
| Acc. Dat. | in-kū , etc. | un-kū , etc. |
| Obl. | in, inū, inū, inō, inhō, inhē, inan | un, unū, unū, unō, unhō, unhē, unan |

The singular is often used for the plural, and vice versa.

The Agent Singular is often inē or inī, and unē or unī.

The Reflexive Pronoun is,— SINGULAR AND PLURAL.

Nom. āp, ap, āpē, āpē, apē, apē, āpasē, āpan, self or selves.

Gen. āp-kā (-kē, -kī), apnā (-nē, -nī), āpnā (-nē, -nī), āpan, āpas, etc.

Obl. āp, apnē, āpnē, āpan, āpas, āpasē.

The Relative, Correlative, and Interrogative Pronouns are,—

| Sing | Who. | That | Who? |
|-------|--------------------------|------------|-------------------------------|
| Nom. | jō, jō, jinē, jin | sō | kō, kō, kōn, kinē, kin |
| Obl. | jis | tis | kis |
| Plur. | | | |
| Nom. | jō, jō, jinē, jin | sō | kō, kō, kōn, kinē, kin |
| Obl. | jin | tin | kin |

The Hindōstānī Dative-Accusatives jisē, plur. jinhē, and so on are also employed.

The Neuter Interrogative Pronoun is kyā or kā, what?, oblique form kāhē, kāhī, or kī.

The Indefinite Pronouns are kōī, obl. form kōī, kisī or kisū; and kuchh, obl. form kuchh. These are used for both persons and things, but kōī is more often applied to the former, and kuchh to the latter. There are also jō-kōī, jin-kōī, jē-kōī, or jakōī, whoever, and jō-kuchh, jē-kuchh, or jakuchh, whatever.

CONJUGATION.

The Infinitive usually ends in nā, as in Standard Hindōstānī. Sometimes we have instead an, n, or nā. Thus, mārnā, māran, or mārnā; obl. masc. mārnē or mārnē; fem. sing. mārnī; plur. mārniyā or mārnyā, to strike; jān, to go; dēn-kā, of giving.

The Present Participle ends in tā, or, sometimes, in at or t, as in mārtā or mārat, striking; dēt, giving. The feminine plural ends in tiyā or tyā. Thus, mārtiyā or mārtyā.

The Past Participle ends in ā, or sometimes in yā. Thus, mārā or māryā, struck. The feminine plural ends in yā. Thus, māryā, they (fem.) struck. The irregular forms are as in Standard Hindōstānī. We have, however, also such forms as karā or karyā, done; muāyā (for muā), dead. This participle is sometimes used with the genitive of the subject, as in woh mērā mārā hai, he is killed of me, i.e., I killed him.

The Conjunctive Participle has many forms, such as mār-kō or mārē-kō. Other forms of the postposition, attached to either mār or mārē, are kē, kar, kar-kē, kar-kō, kar-kar, kō, ka. Examples of other verbs are hō-kō or hōē-kō, having been; ā-kar or āē-kar, having come.

The Verb Substantive is thus conjugated,—

| | Sing | Plur |
|----|------------|--|
| 1. | hā | hāī or hē , hai |
| 2. | hai | hāī or hē (Madras), hō (Bombay) |
| 3. | hai | hāī or hē , hai . |

The plural is often used for the singular.

The Past Tense is thā, etc., as in the Standard. Sometimes we have athā, etc., instead of thā.

The conjugation of the Active Verb closely agrees with that of Standard Hindostānī. The following are the main points of difference.

In Madras the second person plural is the same as the first and third persons, as in tum mārē, you may strike. In Bombay it ends in ō as in the Standard. Thus, tum mārō. The present subjunctive (old present) is often employed as a present or even as a future. The singular is commonly used instead of the plural.

The second plural imperative ends in ō, ō or au, as mārō, mārō or mārau, strike ye.

The future is, as usual, formed by adding gā (masc. plur. gē; fem. sing. gī, plur. gyā) to the present subjunctive or old present; thus, maĩ mārū-gā, I shall strike. In Madras, the 2nd plur. masc. is mārēgē, not mārōgē. The singular is commonly used for the plural, as ham mārēgā or mārēgē, we shall strike.

The conjugation of the past tense of intransitive verbs is as the standard. Thus, maĩ chalā, I went. In the case of transitive verbs custom differs. In Bombay, the standard idiom is followed, as in maĩ-nē mārā, I struck; maĩ-nē yeh bāt sunī, I heard this affair. In Madras, on the contrary, nē is usually omitted, and the verb is treated as if it were intransitive agreeing with the subject in gender and number. Thus, maĩ mārā, I (who am a man) struck; maĩ mārī, I (who am a woman) struck. Sometimes nē is used, but here it is pleonastic, and the construction is the same as when it is not used, the verb still agreeing in gender and number with the subject, and not with the object. Thus, ō mārī or ō-nē mārī, she struck. The same idioms are employed, according to locality, for all the past tenses of transitive verbs. In Bombay, the passive construction is employed, while in Madras it is not. In Bombay, even, the use of nē is by no means regular. It is often employed with intransitive verbs,—e.g., us-nē chalā, he went; and even with the present tense of transitive verbs as in maĩ-nē mārta-hū, I am striking.

VERNACULAR HINDŌSTĀNĪ.

The dialect of Western Hindī spoken in Western Rohilkhand, in the Upper Gangetic Doab, and in the Panjab district of Ambala is what I call Vernacular Hindōstānī, that is to say, it is the form of speech on which the Literary Hindōstānī that took its rise in Delhi is based. Its grammar differs from that of the standard dialect in only a few minor points, and most of these are cases of surplusage, in which two or more expressions can be optionally employed to connote the same idea. In such cases, Literary Hindōstānī has usually selected one form as the standard, and rejected the other.

In its vocabulary, even amongst rustics, Vernacular Hindōstānī rather affects the use of Persian and Arabic words, which it often distorts in the borrowing. Thus, instead of using mā for mother, a Muzaffarnagar villager says maldah, which is a corruption of the Arabic wālida. Other examples of these corruptions are :—

Mahaujat for muhāfazat, watching, guarding.

Kāl for intiḡāl, death (confused with the Sanskrit kāla, time, death).

Tamakkus for tamassuk, a bond.

Matbal for maṭlab, intention.

Ugāhī for guwāhī, testimony.

The language of the State of Rampur and of the districts of Moradabad and Bijnaur east of the Ganges and in Western Rohilkhand, possesses the strongest resemblance to Literary Hindōstānī. This is no doubt due to the influence of Islām, which has always been strong in these parts. Crossing the Ganges we come into the Upper Doab between the Ganges and the Jamna. For our present purposes we may take this as including (going from south to north) the districts of Meerut, Muzaffarnagar, Saharanpur, and the plains portion of Dehra Dun. In the hill country of Dehra Dun the language is Jaunsārī, which belongs to the Pahārī group of Indo-Aryan vernaculars. The language of the Upper Dōāb also agrees with Literary Hindōstānī, but the agreement is not quite so strong, as several optional forms are employed, which do not occur in the standard dialect or in that of Western Rohilkhand. Crossing the Jamna from the Upper Doab we enter the Panjab. The Districts bordering on the west bank of that river, going from south to north, are Delhi, Karnal, and Ambala. The language of Delhi district (as distinct from that of the famous city of the same name) and of Karnal is not Hindōstānī. It is a distinct dialect of Western Hindī, strongly influenced by Pañjābī and Rājasthānī, called ‘ Bāngarū ’ or ‘ Jāṭū.’ The influence of Rājasthānī has disappeared in Ambala, and we may say that the language of the eastern part of that district including the adjacent parts of the States of Kalsia and Patiala is Vernacular Hindōstānī, more or less affected by Pañjābī. In Western Ambala the language is actually Pañjābī. In this part of the country the boundary between the two languages, Pañjābī and Western Hindī as represented by Vernacular Hindōstānī, may be taken to be the river Ghaggar, anciently known as the Drishadvatī. Within these limits we can estimate that Vernacular Hindōstānī is employed by the following number of speakers.

These figures do not include the number of people in these localities who are estimated to be speakers of Literary Hindōstānī under the form of Urdū. These last figures have been included in those for Literary Hindōstānī, and have, in each case, been estimated by taking the whole of the Urban Musalmān population, half the rural population, and half the Christian population. The figures so arrived at are as follows :—

In the last three districts the number of speakers of Literary Hindōstānī is small, and has not been estimated separately.

It will have been seen that Vernacular Hindōstānī is spoken in the north-western corner of the area occupied by Western Hindī.¹ To its west it has either Pañjābī or the half-Rājasthānī of Delhi and Karnal. To its north are hill languages belonging to the Pahārī group of Indo-Aryan vernaculars (which are all closely connected with Rājasthānī), and to its south and east the Braj Bhākhā dialect of Western Hindī.

We are therefore entitled to assume that Vernacular Hindōstānī (and consequently Literary Hindōstānī) is that form of Western Hindī which shows the Braj Bhākhā dialect shading off into Pañjābī and Rājasthānī, and such indeed is the fact.

In all the other dialects of Western Hindī, the typical ending of strong tadbhava participles, adjectives, and substantives is the letter ō or au. For instance the word for 'good' is bhalō or bhalau, that for 'struck' is mārō or māryau, and that for horse is ghōrō or ghōrau. So the termination of the genitive masculine is kō or kau; thus, ghōrē-kau, of a horse. In Pañjābī, the corresponding termination is ā, not au or ō. So we find in both Vernacular and Literary Hindōstānī the Pañjābī termination ā. Thus, bhalā, good; mārā, struck; ghōrā, a horse; ghōrē-kā, of a horse. The last example would be, in Pañjābī, ghōrē-dā, so that we see that Hindōstānī, while preserving kau, the suffix of Western Hindī, has given it the Pañjābī termination ā. It has not taken the Pañjābī suffix dā, as a whole.

In its consonantal system Vernacular (but not Literary) Hindōstānī uses the cerebral ṇ and ḷ very freely. These do not occur in the other Western Hindī dialects, but are common in Eastern Pañjābī and in Rājasthānī.

The oblique plural of nouns often ends in ā̃, as in Pañjābī and Rājasthānī. This is excluded from ordinary Literary Hindōstānī, but is common in Dakṣiṇī. It does not occur in other dialects of Western Hindī.

The present tense of the Active verb is often formed by conjugating the old present, commonly called the present subjunctive, with the present tense of the verb substantive. Thus, beside the standard form mārtū-hū̃, we have also mārū̃-hū̃, I am striking. The Imperfect is usually formed by conjugating the past tense of the verb substantive with an oblique verbal noun in ē. Thus, maĩ māre-thā, I was striking, literally, I was on striking. These two forms are frequently met in Rājasthānī. They are also heard in that part of the Braj Bhākhā area which lies between the Upper Doab and Rajputana.

The above is sufficient to show the place occupied by Vernacular (and Literary) Hindōstānī in relation to the surrounding dialects. There are other similar occurrences, which, together with those points which are peculiar to Vernacular Hindōstānī itself, will be dealt with in detail when we come to the specimens.

BĀNGAR, JĀṬU, AND HARIĀNĪ.

We have just seen that in the district of Ambala the Vernacular Hindōstānī of the Upper Doab merges into Pañjābī. South of Ambala, in the country along the west bank of the Jamna, we find a disturbing element in the proximity, not only of the Pañjābī to the west as in Ambala, but also of Rājasthānī, under the form of Mēwātī, to the south. This tract consists of the districts of Karnal, Rohtak, and Delhi. It also includes the south-east corner of the State of Patiala, the east of the district of Hissar, and detached portions of the States of Nabha and Jind which lie between Rohtak and Hissar. On the east it is separated from the Upper Doab by the river Jamna. On the north it has the district of Ambala, and on the south the district of Gurgaon. On the west it is bounded by the State of Patiala and, further south, the rest of the district of Hissar. That portion of the tract which consists of the east of the district of Hissar and of the country immediately adjoining is known to natives as Hariānā. The rest is known either as Bāngar or Khādir. The bulk of the population of the whole tract consists of persons of the Jāt tribe.

As regards the Bāngar and the Khādir, the latter is the land immediately on the west bank of the river Jamna in the districts of Karnal and Delhi. In Karnal, it is only a few miles wide, and is bounded on the west by a ridge which is the commencement of the Bāngar, or high, dry, land. The Bāngar extends right across the district into the State of Patiala where the country round Nirwana is also known as Bāngar. South of Nirwana, in the Jind Nizāmat of the State of Jind the Bāngar is continued, and goes on, over the whole of the district of Rohtak, into the eastern half of the Dadri Nizāmat of Jind, and into the northern half of that portion of the State of Nabha which lies to the west of Rewari in Gurgaon. To the west of this lies the Hariānā tract of Hissar, and that name is also applied to the two Nizāmats of the Jind State which have just been mentioned. The district of Delhi falls geographically into two parts, the southern (and smaller), and the northern (and larger). The northern part is, like Karnal, divided into Khādir and Bāngar, the boundary between them being approximately the Grand Trunk Road. The southern portion consists mainly of hills, inhabited by Gūjars, who like others of that tribe speak a form of Rājasthānī. The Khādir, however, still continues between the hills and the Jamna, and is here rather wider. On the west of the hills, round Najafgarh, there is a low, marshy, tract, known as the Dābar, which is not a part of the Bāngar, but is a continuation of the Gurgaon country, which is inhabited by Ahirs who speak Ahīrwātī, the dialect of the west of Gurgaon. Moreover, Ahīrwātī has extended into Jhajjar, the southern Tahsil of Rohtak, although this country is properly a part of the Bāngar.

With the exception of this Jhajjar Tahsil, the language of Hariānā, the Bāngar, and the Khādir, is everywhere the same. It is a form of Western Hindī influenced in its vocabulary by Pañjābī, and strongly affected in its grammar by the Ahīrwātī of Gurgaon which itself is a mixed dialect partly Western Hindī and partly Rājasthānī, and which might almost be classed under either language. In the present survey it is classed as a form of the Mēwātī dialect of Rājasthānī. Ahīrwātī has to its south the pure Mēwātī spoken in Gurgaon and Alwar, and to its west the Bāgrī and Shēkhāwātī of Bikanir and the Shēkhāwātī country.

The dialect with which we are dealing at present has various names according to locality and to the castes of its speakers. In Hariānā and the neighbourhood it is called Hariānī, Dēs-wālī, or Dēsari; in Rohtak and Delhi it is usually called Jātū, or the language of the Jāts who form the bulk of the population; in Delhi, which also has many Chamārs in its population, it is sometimes called Chamarwā. Elsewhere it is called Bāngarū, or the language of the Bāngar (as well as of the Khādir). Everywhere, by whatever name it is called, it is the same dialect. The best general name for it is Bāngarū. With the exception of the Khādir, this Hariānā-Bāngar tract does not drain into the Jamna, although so close to that river. The Bāngar forms the watershed between the river system flowing into the Bay of Bengal and that flowing into the Indian Ocean. All the drainage of Hariānā and the Bāngar runs to the west, not to the east.

The following account of the linguistic character of the district of Hissar is based on the information given in the local Gazetteer :—

Hariānā is the name of an important tract in the south-east of the district of Hissar. It stretches from the confines of the tract watered by the Ghaggar to the south-east corner of the district and beyond. On the north it stretches across a considerable portion of the Fatahabad Tahsil, but gradually narrows in width towards the south, being encroached upon by the Bāgar sand. It comprises within its limits the eastern portions of Tahsils Fatahabad and Hissar, the whole of Tahsil Hansi, and a small portion of the eastern half of the Bhiwani Tahsil. Hissar is the meeting ground of three distinct languages, Western Hindi, Pañjābī, and Rājasthānī. Western Hindi appears under the form of Hariānī, Pañjābī, in the Mālvi dialect, and in the Rāthī or Pachhāḍī, the speech of the Pachhāḍa Musalmāns of the Ghaggar valley, and Rājasthānī in the form of Bāgrī. The boundaries of the tract in which a more or less pure Hariānī is spoken may be defined as all that portion of the district south of a line drawn from Fatahabad to Tohana and east of a line through Fatahabad, Hissar, and Kairn. This includes more than half the area of the four southern Tahsils of the district. Across the northern boundary of this tract we come to the Pañjābī-speaking Pachhāḍas of the Ghaggar valley, and to the north-west of Fatahabad lies the Sirsa Tahsil in which Western Hindi is practically unknown. Across the western boundary of the Hariānī-speaking tract we come to what may be regarded as the debateable ground between Hariānī and Bāgrī. There is no hard-and-fast line at which Hariānī ends and Bāgrī begins. The change takes the form of an even broader pronunciation of the vowels than in Hariānī and then a gradual change in vocabulary and grammar, but within the limits of Tahsils Fatahabad, Hissar, and Bhiwani the change is so slight that it is doubtful whether it can be said that true Bāgrī is spoken anywhere in these Tahsils. A considerable part of the debateable tract is held by Bāgrī immigrants, and the effect of the immigration has been to introduce a decidedly Hariānī element into their Bāgrī rather than the reverse. True Bāgrī as distinguished from Hariānī is spoken in the south-west of Sirsa Tahsil.

On crossing the northern boundary of the tract defined above we first meet with Pañjābī among the Pachhāḍas of the Ghaggar valley. The same language is found all the way down the length of the valley into the Sirsa Tahsil, and nearly to the point where it crosses the Bikanir border. In the portion of the Sirsa Tahsil south of the Ghaggar valley, Bāgrī is the ordinary speech which changes to Pañjābī on the north of the Ghaggar. Thus the Pañjābī-speaking tract embraces the valley of the Ghaggar and the portion of the district north of it. The Pañjābī of the district may be divided into two dialects; Mālvi Pañjābī, the natural tongue of the Sikh Jāts, and the speech of the Musalmān Pachhāḍa of the west, known as Pachhāḍī or Rāthī. Rāth (ruthless) is only another name for Pachhāḍa and Pachhāḍī and Rāthī are identical. Pachhāḍī is distinguished from Mālvi by the greater prevalence of nasal sounds and by a slight admixture of Hindostānī and Bāgrī words. Mālvi is spoken by the Sikh Jāts in the Sirsa Tahsil north of the Ghaggar, in Budhlāda, and by the colonies of Patiala Sikh Jāts found here and there along the Ghaggar in the Fatahabad Tahsil. Pachhāḍī is, however, the common form of speech on the Ghaggar along the whole of its course in this district, and is found in villages at considerable distances to the south of that stream.

To return to Hariānī. Hariānā is also locally known as the Dēs, the country, par excellence, and hence Hariānī is also often called Dēsari or Dēs-wālī. The north-eastern portion of the Dadri Nizāmat of the Jind State and the adjoining portions of the State of Dujana are also parts of Hariānā, and the Bāngarū spoken here is also called Hariānī. In the rest of Dadri and in the adjoining state of Loharu the language is Bāgrī.¹ In the Jind Nizāmat of Jind, although this is certainly true Bāngar country, the local form of speech is also known as Hariānī. Natives profess to distinguish between Hariānī and Bāngarū, and say that the former, and not Bāngarū, is heard in the Jāt and Rōr villages of Karnāl, but, except that the Hariānā vocabulary now and then borrows a word or two from Bāgri, the specimens show no difference between the two forms of speech.¹

In giving the following estimated numbers of speakers of Bāngarū under its various names, it is necessary to explain that those given for Delhi are not the same as those originally published in the Rough List of Languages of that district. That list wrongly reported the Ahīrwātī of the Dābar under the name of Mēwātī, and also gave separate figures for Jātū and Chamarwā, which are one and the same form of speech. The Delhi figures for Jātū now given are therefore the sum of the original figures for Jātū and Chamarwā.

Bāngarū, being a mixed dialect, is not described in detail here. Its peculiarities will be discussed when we come to deal with the specimens.

¹ In Appendix II of the Sirsa Settlement Report, Mr. J. Wilson states that the genitive postposition of 'Dēswālī' is gē (masc. obl. gē; fem. gī). This really belongs to Bāgri. I have not found this in any of the specimens received from Hariānā, and under any circumstances, Sirsa is well outside the true Hariānā country.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OR ANTARBĒDĪ.

The dialect is called Braj Bhākhā (also spelt Braj Bhāshā), i.e., the language of the Braj Maṇḍal. It is also called Antarbēdī, the language of the Antarbēd (Sanskrit Antarrēdī, literally the country within the sacrificial ground, i.e., the holy land, par excellence, of India) or the Doab between the Ganges and the Jamna. Neither name completely describes the language, for it is spoken far beyond the Braj Maṇḍal and the Doab, although it does not by any means cover the whole of the latter tract. The Braj Maṇḍal almost exactly coincides with the modern district of Muttra, if we exclude the eastern corner comprising Sadabad and a portion of Mahāban, which were added to the district in the year 1832. The Braj Maṇḍal (Sanskrit Vraja-maṇḍala), or Region of the Cowpens, is the country round Gökula and Vṛindāvana, the abode of Kṛishṇa's foster-father Nanda, and the scene of that demi-god's juvenile adventures.

Instead of 'Braj Bhākhā,' the name of the country 'Braj' is often loosely applied to mean the language. The name Antarbēdī is frequently applied to the dialects spoken in the central Doab, i.e., in the districts of Agra, Etah, Mainpuri, Farukhabad, and Etawah. The language of Farukhabad and Etawah is Kanaujī, and that of the others Braj Bhākhā.

Taking Muttra as the centre, Braj Bhākhā is spoken to the south in the district of Agra, in the greater part of the State of Bharatpur, in the States of Dholpur and Karauli, in the western part of Gwalior, and in the east of Jaipur. To the north it is spoken in the eastern part of Gurgaon. To the north-east, in the Dōāb, in Bulandshahr, Aligarh, Etah, and Mainpuri, and, across the Ganges, in Budaon, Bareilly, and the Tarai parganas of Naini Tal. It thus occupies an irregularly shaped tract running from south-west to north-east, and measuring on an average 90 miles wide by 300 miles in length. It covers, roughly speaking, an area of 27,000 square miles. It is spoken at home by, in round numbers, 7,850,000 people.

Over this area Braj Bhākhā exhibits a few variations. The standard form of the dialect is best illustrated by the language of Muttra, Aligarh, and West Agra. To the north of Aligarh lies the district of Bulandshahr, where the language is much mixed with Vernacular Hindōstānī. So far as the Braj Bhākhā portion of its grammar is concerned, the only important difference is the change of the typical Braj termination au to ō. Thus, chalyō, not chalyau, gone. In the east of Agra, Dholpur, the plains portion of Karauli, and the neighbouring portion of Gwalior, the language is very nearly the standard, the only important difference being the omission of the letter y from the past participles of verbs, thus, chala, not chalyau. In the Doab we find a similar omission of y in the districts of Etah and Mainpuri, the most eastern of the Braj Bhākhā area, and here we have in addition the Bulandshahr change of au to ō, as in chalō, not chalyau. The same peculiarities are observable across the Ganges in the districts of Budaun and Bareilly. In each case we see Braj Bhākhā fading off into Kanaujī, in which chalō is the regular form. Again, in the north-west of Gwalior, we also observe the change of au to ō and the omission of y, the language in this case fading off into the Bhadauri form of Bundēli.

In Bharatpur and in the Ḍāṅg dialects to its south, which lie to the west of Karauli, the y is preserved, and au is sometimes changed to ō and sometimes not. Here we have the language fading off into the Jaipurī dialect of Rājasthānī in which the y exists, but the termination is always ō, not au. Similarly in Gurgaon, the dialect is fading off into Mēwātī, and here again the au has become ō, but the y is preserved. Finally in the Tārai Parganas of Naini Tal, we find a mongrel dialect, locally known as Bhukṣā, from one of the tribes which employ it. I have classed it as Braj Bhākhā, but it might with equal propriety be put under Kanaujī or Hindōstānī.

Natives do not recognise all these distinctions. They, however, admit the following varieties. The Braj Bhākhā of the east, where it is shading off into Kanaujī, they often call Antarbēdī. The dialect of the north-east corner of Gwalior, opposite the State of Dholpur, the country of the Sikarwār Rajputs, they call Sikarwārī. The dialect of the plains portion of Karauli and of the portion of Gwalior opposite that State across the Chambal, they call Jādōbātī, from the Jādōs who are settled there. The broken country in the south of Bharatpur, in Karauli, and in the east of Jaipur is called the Ḍāṅg and the dialect spoken by the Gūjar inhabitants of these hills is called Ḍāṅgī, with further subdivisions in Jaipur into Ḍāṅgī proper, Ḍūgarwārā, Kālimāl, and Ḍāṅgbhāṅg. As already stated, the mixed dialect of the Naini Tal Tarai is called Bhukṣā.

Taking the use of yau, au, yō, or ō in the past participles as our criterion, we are able to classify the various forms of Braj Bhākhā as follows :—

I.—Standard Braj (chal^{yau}).

Muttra.

Aligarh.

West Agra.

II.—Standard Braj (chal^{yō}).

Bulandshahr.

III.—Standard Braj (chal^{au}).

East Agra.

Dholpur.

Jādōbātī (Karauli plains and Gwalior).

IV.—Braj merging into Kanaujī (chalō).

Etah.

Mainpurī.

Budaun.

Bareilly

V.—Braj merging into Bhadaurī (chalō).

Sikarwārī (north-west of Gwalior).

VI.—Braj merging into Rājasthānī (Jaipurī) (chal^{yau} or chal^{yō}).

Bharatpur.

Ḍāṅg Dialects.

VII.—Braj merging into Rājasthānī (Mēwātī) (chal^{yō}).

Gurgaon.

VIII.—Mixed dialect of Naini Tal Tarai.

In the district of Aligarh, and in the east of the district of Agra, we come across a very peculiar form of the pronoun of the third person, viz.: gwa or gu, he, she, it or that. So far as the specimens show, this form only occurs in this tract, but in the Dāng dialects we find a form hwa, which suggests its origin. In the districts in the east of the Braj Bhākhā tract we notice a tendency to run consonants into each other, especially when the first of them is the letter r. This is also a marked feature of the neighbouring Bhadaurī form of Bundelī. Examples are khachchu for kharchu, expenditure (Mainpurī); matt for marat, dying (Sikarwārī); ṭhākussā for ṭhākur-sāhib (Etah); and (even so far north-west as Aligarh) naukanni for naukarani, servants.

In the districts of Budaun and Bulandshahr, the Braj Bhākhā is much mixed with the neighbouring vernacular Hindōstānī, just as in the former district it is also mixed with Kanaujī. One more small point may be noticed. Over a great portion of the Braj Bhākhā tract there is an instrumental case ending in an, as in bhūkhan, by hunger. In Agra and Dholpur we have instead a form in ani, thus, bhūkhani. This is an interesting survival of the time when the suffix nē was once used for the instrumental as well as for the agent case.

In the broken country in the south of Bharatpur, in Karauli, and in the east of Jaipur, the Braj Bhākhā employed by the Gūjar inhabitants presents many notable peculiarities. These are described in the section relating to those dialects. Suffice it to say here that they form a connecting link between Braj Bhākhā and the Jaipurī dialect of Rājasthānī. Like many rude forms of speech they are of importance for the comparative philology of the modern Indo-Aryan vernaculars.

It will be seen from the above that there exist several cross-divisions in the classification of the various forms of Braj Bhākhā. It is hence by no means easy to arrange the districts in which it is spoken in an order which is convenient for the examination of the specimens. That given in the following paragraph is the one which I have adopted:—

No information is available as to the number of speakers who employ Braj Bhākhā outside its own area.

Braj Bhākhā is more typically Western Hindī than is literary Hindōstānī, and is also more archaic. The latter dialect, based on the form of speech employed in the north-west corner of the Western Hindī area, is strongly influenced by Pañjābī. It follows the latter language, more especially, in the preference for the termination ā for strong masculine tadbhava nouns, adjectives, and participles, and in employing only one form of the future tense, that made by suffixing gā. In Braj Bhākhā au is generally preferred to ā, and, though gau is also employed to express the future, a form of which the characteristic letter is h is more commonly met with. The future made with gā or gau extends over all the north of India from the Panjab to Bihar. In the west it is the only form, but its use becomes more and more rare as we go eastwards, so that in Bihar it is only met in sporadic instances.

The archaic nature of Braj Bhākhā is well illustrated by the occasional retention of a neuter gender. In most of the dialects of northern India this gender has nearly altogether disappeared,—nouns, which in former days were neuter, having as a rule become masculine. In Braj Bhākhā, however, it is occasionally preserved. For instance, the infinitive was originally a neuter, hence, in Braj Bhākhā we have not only the usual masculine form, e.g., mār^anan (Hindōstānī, mār^anā), to strike, but also, and more usually, the neuter form mār^anaũ. In the rural dialects this retention of the neuter is more widely spread than in the Braj Bhākhā of literature; for instance, we have the neuter word sōnaũ or sōnō̃, gold; and even a neuter adjective in phrases like ap^anaũ (or ap^anō̃) dhan, his own wealth.

I have said above that Braj Bhākhā generally prefers the termination au to the ā of Hindōstānī. Towards the east of the area in which the dialect is spoken, there is a tendency to pronounce this au as ō, after the Kanaujī fashion. I shall, henceforth, treat these terminations au and ō as convertible terms. The standard Braj of Muttra, the Doab, and Rohilkhand, does not use this au termination for nouns substantives. In the case of these it takes the termination ā, not au. Thus, ghōrā, not ghōrau, a horse. The oblique form singular and the nominative plural of these nouns ends in ē, also as in Hindōstānī. As we go south of Muttra, however, we find these nouns ending in au or ō, and, moreover, the oblique form singular and the nominative plural ends in ā, not ē,—an idiom which is borrowed from Rājasthānī. Adjectives (including genitives and participles), on the other hand, universally end in au or ō. Thus, standard Braj, ghōrē-kau, southern Braj, ghōrā-kau, of a horse; bhalau, good; chalyau, gone. Besides aũ, corresponding to the Hindōstānī ō̃, nouns have an oblique plural in nī or n, as in ghōran-kaũ, or ghōrani-kau, of horses.

The pronouns show many divergencies from standard Hindōstānī. These will be described later on, when dealing with the grammar. Here it will suffice to draw attention to the frequent use of the word haũ, meaning 'I.'

As regards verbs, the present tense of the auxiliary does not differ materially from Hindōstānī, but this is not the case with the past tense which is hau or hatau, not thā, (I) was.

In the active verb, the present participle ends in tu or t (e.g., māratu, or mārat, striking), not in tā, as in the Hindōstānī mār'tā. The past participle of standard Braj is very characteristic. It ends in yau, as in māryau, struck. As we go eastwards, there is a tendency to drop the y, so that we have forms like chalau, chalō. On the other hand, to the south, the y is inserted in adjectives which are not participles, so that we have words like āchhyau, good; tihāryau, your. The y, which properly belongs only to the past participle, is a survival of an old Sanskrit i. The stages may be represented as follows:—Sanskrit, māritakah; Prakrit, māridaō, māriaō, māriau; Braj, māryau.

The tense which in Hindōstānī is often called the aorist and is usually employed as a present subjunctive, is in reality an old present indicative, the meaning of which has been specialised. In Braj Bhākhā it is quite common to find it used in its original meaning of a present indicative. When it is desired to define the meaning of this tense, so as to make it a present definite, this is done by adding to it the present tense of the verb substantive. Thus, haũ māraũ-haũ, I am striking; tū mārāi-hai, thou art striking. Another form of the present definite is made with the present participle, as in ordinary Hindōstānī. Similarly the imperfect tense is made with the present participle, but in some parts of the Braj Bhākhā area we find another set of forms of the imperfect made by adding the past tense of the verb substantive to what is usually identified¹ as the third person singular of the simple present for all persons and numbers. Thus, mārāi-hau, I, thou, or he was striking; mārāi-hē, we, you, they were striking.

The future tense of Braj Bhākhā may be formed by adding gau to the simple present, thus, māraũ-gau, thus following Hindōstānī. The more usual method is, however, to add ih or aih to the root, and then to suffix the same terminations as those of the simple present. Thus, mārihaũ, I shall strike. This tense is derived directly from the ancient Sanskrit. The steps are Sanskrit, mārishyāmi; Prakrit, mārissāmi, mārihāmi, mārihaũ; Braj Bhākhā, mārihaũ. It is thus seen that the Braj Bhākhā future is identical with the latest form of the Prakrit future.

Braj Bhākhā has a long and illustrious roll of authors. The earliest work with which I am acquainted is the Prithirāj Rāsau of Chand Literature Bardāi. Chand states himself that he was born at Lahore, and he was the most famous of the Rajput bards. Nevertheless he wrote neither in Pañjābī nor in Rājasthānī, but in an old form of Braj Bhākhā. He was the court poet of Prithirāj Chauhan of Delhi, the last of the great Hindū monarchs, who was conquered and slain by the Muhammadan invaders under Shahābu'd-dīn in the year 1192 A.D. In the Prithirāj Rāsau, Chand celebrates his master's exploits. These took place mainly in the middle Doab and the north of Rajputana and Bundelkhand, so that the employment of Braj Bhākhā is not surprising. The language is so old that parts of it are actually pure Prakrit. Unfortunately the value of the work either as a historical document or for linguistic study is discounted by the fact that grave doubts exist as to its genuineness. It is, in any case, certain that it contains copious interpolations. The poem has not yet been critically edited in its entirety, but the Nāgarī Prachārīnī Sabhā of Benares has undertaken the task, and a good edition is now (1812) becoming available to students.

During the fifteenth century there was current in northern India a system of Vishnu-worship, founded by a learned Brāhman, whose date is uncertain, named Vishnu-swāmī. The incarnation of the deity which was principally adored was that of Krishna, conjointly with that of his spouse Rādhā. Vishnu-swāmī preached to Brāhmans only, and his teaching was not promulgated as a popular religion,—his followers were a select few. At the end of the fifteenth century, a Tailinga Brāhman named Vallabhāchārya changed all this, by popularising the cult of Rādhā-Krishna, and introducing it to the mass of the people. The faith centred round Mathurā,—in other words, the Braj Maṇḍal,—the scene of the sports of the youthful Krishna, and of his amours with Rādhā and the other herdmaidens of Gōkula. Here Vallabhāchārya finally settled. He left eight famous pupils, who are collectively known as the Ashta Chhāp. The most conspicuous of them were Viṭṭhalnāth and Sūr-dās. These eight old master-singers settled in the country hallowed by their traditions, and became founders of the illustrious colony of Gōkulastha Gosāīs, filling all the Doab with the music of their songs. They employed the Braj Bhākhā dialect as the medium of their verse, and since their time, just as Awadhī has become the language, first of the Gestes of Rāma, and, secondly, of all north Indian Epic poetry, so Braj Bhākhā has ever since remained the one suitable vehicle for the praise of Krishna and his divine mistress. The Ashta Chhāp had many pupils and many imitators, several of whom have displayed signal command over language, and have succeeded admirably in composing the padas which are characteristic of their style,—short mystic love songs, in which the love of Krishna for Rādhā is compared to the love of the Supreme Deity for the human soul. The graceful diction, and at the same time the passionate yearning of some of these hymns have not often been surpassed.

The greatest of all this group was undoubtedly Sūr-dās (flourished 1550). He was a son of a court singer to the Emperor Akbar, and was blind,—the youngest of seven brothers, of whom six had been killed in battle fighting for the independence of Hindostan. He was a voluminous writer, and his fame chiefly rests upon his well-known Sūr-sāgar, a collection of stanzas extending to something like 60,000 lines. He justly holds a high place in the ranks of Indian literature. He excelled in all styles. He could, if occasion required, be more obscure than the Sphinx, and in the next verse be as clear as a ray of light. Other writers may have equalled him in some particular quality, but (in his special line) he combined the best qualities of all. To European taste there is too much sameness in his narrative style, —a sweet evenness, it is true,—to allow him to claim all that Indian devotees would render to him. The blind bard of Mathurā was a great poet, but nowhere does he reach to that high nobility of thought which illumines all that his great rival, Tulsī-dās of Audh, has written.

To give a list of Sūr-dās's successors and imitators would be unprofitable, and to describe their work at any length would occupy too much space. I content myself with referring to Nābhā-dās (fl. 1600), originally a Dōm by caste, the author of the Bhakt-māl, a collection of legends about the great Vaishnava reformers, from which some historical matter may be extracted. Other famous writers in Braj Bhākhā are Dēva Datt (early 17th century) of Mainpurī, who has a great reputation amongst Indian scholars and Bihārī Lāl (fl. 1660), the author of the incomparable Sat-saī, or seven hundred couplets in what is some of the daintiest and most ingenious verse that was ever written. The Sat-saī has aptly been described as the despair of translators and the mine of commentators. The ease with which its author inevitably uses the right word in the right place makes translation almost impossible, and the compressed nature of his style,—each couplet being in itself a completely finished miniature,—gives rise to difficulties that afford an irresistible temptation to scholars who are learned men without being poets, and who love to hide what is obscure in the still deeper darkness of paraphrase and commentary.

AUTHORITIES.

The first recognition of Braj Bhākhā as a distinct dialect with which I am acquainted is Lallū Lāl's grammar mentioned below, which was published in 1811. The early Jesuit Missionaries do not seem to have been acquainted with it, nor is it mentioned in old collections of language-specimens such as the Sprachmeister. In the following list I mention only those grammars and other aids to the student which deal directly with the dialect. Full information regarding other works in Braj Bhākhā will be found in the general bibliography of Western Hindī.

The only translation of the Scriptures into Braj Bhākhā with which I am acquainted is the 'Bruj' version of the New Testament by the Serampore Missionaries (Carey, and Chamberlain, 1818—1833).

A skeleton grammar of the Braj Bhākhā dialect is given below. In writing it, I have presumed that the reader is acquainted with the principles of standard Hindōstānī. The following additional information will be found of use. For the sake of completeness much is a repetition of matter in the preceding pages.

In many parts of the Braj Bhākhā area, especially to the east and south-east, near the Bhadaurī country, the letter r when it precedes a consonant is often elided, and the following consonant is then doubled. Examples are maddu for mard, a man; majjāu, for mar-jāu, die (imperative); mattū, for marat-hū, I am dying; naukannu-sū, for nauk^rranu-sū, to the servants (after a verb of saying). In Aligarh we meet a similar elision of j in bhēd dayau, for bhēj dayau, he sent.

The sound of the letter w is very indefinite. It is often pronounced as b. Thus, the word for 'he' is as often bō as wō. The true sound is really something between the two letters. The letter w often becomes m, especially after a long vowel. Examples are mahā (or bhā) for wahā, there; charāmatu-ai, is grazing; āmatu-ai, is coming; manāman, to celebrate; jāmē, they may go; rōmati, she (was) weeping; bāman, fifty-two.

Aspirates are very loosely dealt with. They are quite frequently dropped in the verb substantive. Thus, in Aligarh, we have, ū, I am; ē, thou art, he is; ē, we are, they are; au, you are; ō, he was. So, we have hāt for hāth, a hand. II is moved in its position in bhā, for wahā, there; bhaut, for bahut, much; and kulaph, for qufl, a bolt.

In Aligarh, we have ky changed to ch in chō, for kyō, why.

Except in the Braj Mandal and the adjacent country, the diphthong au, which is so characteristic of Braj Bhākhā, is very commonly changed to ō. In fact, over the whole area these two letters may be looked upon as mutually convertible. Thus, chalyau or chalyō, he went.

Attention has already been drawn to the fact that in Braj Bhākhā, strong masculine adjectives (including genitives and participles) of a-bases, end in au, as in bhalau, good; ghar-kau, of the house; chalyau, gone. In the Braj of the Braj Mandal, and of the country to its north and east, this is not the case with substantives. These end in ā, as in Hindōstānī. Substantives end in qu or ō only in the south country bordering on Rajputana. In the same part of the country, these substantives form their oblique singulars in ā, and their oblique plurals in ā, and we meet sporadic instances of this further north. Thus, even in Muttra, we find thōrē dinā pāchhē, after a few days, in which dinā is used instead of the regular Braj Bhākhā form dinan. These oblique forms in ā and ā are no doubt due to the influence of Rājasthānī. Generally these nouns have their singular oblique form and their nominative plural in ai or ē, and their oblique plurals in au or ani. Thus, ghōrā, a horse; ghōrai-kau or ghōrē-kau, of a horse; ghōrai or ghōrē, horses; ghōran-kau or ghōrani-kau, of horses. There is one important group of exceptions. Nouns of relationship, even when their nominatives end in ā, have the Rājasthānī oblique forms everywhere. Thus in Muttra we have dō chhōrā (not chhōrē), two sons; again, lōh^rē bēṭā-nē, by the younger son.

The letter ē added to a noun gives the force of the indefinite article (compare the Persian idiom). Thus, janē-kau, of a certain man; nauk^rē (Muttra), a servant.

There is the usual locative in ē, which is found all over northern India, as in gharē, in a house. There is also an instrumental in ō or ō̃, as in bhūkhō or bhūkhō̃, (I die) of hunger.

The postposition of the case of the agent is usually nē̃ or naī̃. Occasionally we meet the form nu, as in tum-nu mah̃mānī karī-ē (Aligarh), you have given a feast. This postposition is the origin of another instrumental case in n, ni, or nu, according to locality. Thus, bhūkhan, bhūkhani, or bhūkhannu, by hunger. This instrumental in an has become confused with the oblique plural in an, which has an altogether different derivation, and hence an i or a u is often suffixed to this oblique plural form which has no business to be there. Thus, besides ghōran, we have ghōrani, and besides gharan, we have gharanu. Similarly we meet majūranu-kau, of servants; kamērenu-kū̃, to workers, and many other such forms.

Now and then we meet with instances of other old case forms, such are rājai (Aligarh), the accusative-dative of rājā, a king. So we have the termination u added to the nominative of weak a-bases, as in gharu for ghar, a house. Indeed, this termination is often used in the oblique cases as well, where, however, its derivation is different.

There are several instances of the survival of the neuter gender. These have been dealt with ante on p. 72, and need not be again discussed.

Adjectives which end in au often follow, in the south, the example of the past participle, and insert a y. Thus, āchhyau, good; mēryau, my; tihāryau, your.

The accusative-dative of the personal pronouns often takes the forms mōē, tōē, and wāē, in different varieties of spelling. The final ē of these forms is very loosely attached to the base, so that, when emphatic particles are added they are inserted between the two. Thus, mō-ū-ē, me also. In Aligarh and East Agra there is a peculiar form of the personal pronoun of the third person, viz., gu or gwa, he, that; oblique singular gwā. Nominative plural gwē; oblique plural guni. Connected with it is gwā̃ or ngwā̃, there. Another demonstrative pronoun which we meet is nearly the same in form as the relative pronoun. In Aligarh and the east it takes the form jī, and means 'this.' To the south it takes the form jē, and means 'that.' Similarly we have words like jhā̃ meaning 'here' or 'there,' according to locality, and jab, the equivalent of tab, then, besides meaning 'when.'

I have already mentioned the way in which, in some localities, the initial h of the auxiliary verb is dropped. Here I may also draw attention to the following forms found in the Doab. Ni-ū̃=I am not. Hai is used for hwai, having been, and hatu-ē, a nearly pure Kanaujī form, for 'he is.' In the definite present, when the h of the verb substantive is elided, the latter is sometimes combined with the present participle, as in mar̃tū̃, for marat-hū̃, I am dying. This may be further contracted in the east to mattū̃.

The tense which in ordinary Hindōstānī is commonly used in the sense of a present conjunctive is, in Braj Bhākhā, quite commonly employed in its original meaning as a simple present. Thus, māraū̃, I strike, as well as 'I may strike.' When the verb substantive is appended to this tense, we get another form of the definite present, as in māraū̃-haū̃, I am striking.

Another method of making a definite present and an imperfect is to take a verbal noun in ai or ē, and to append to it the appropriate auxiliary. Thus, mārai-haũ or mārē-haũ, I am striking : mārai-hau, or mārē-hau, I was striking. The mārai remains unchanged through all numbers and persons. ✓

Attention has been drawn, on pp. 69 and ff., to the fact that the y of the past participle is commonly dropped in the east, as we approach Kanaujī.

As regards idiom we have to note that the agent case is often used with the past tenses of intransitive verbs. Thus (Muttra), lōh'rē bēṭā-nē chalyau, the younger son went away. This is, of course, quite contrary to the use of standard Hindōstānī, but is justified by the practice of Sanskrit. The verb is to be considered as impersonal, and the above sentence is literally, 'it was gone by the younger son.' In Sanskrit it would be laghunā putrēna chalitam.

Note also how the past tense of verbs of saying and the like is put in the feminine, to agree with bāt understood. Thus, kahī, he said, literally 'the word (bāt) was said by him.'

Imperative, mār, mārahi, māri, strike thou; mārau, strike ye; māriyõ, māriyai, māriyai, be good enough to strike.

Other tenses are formed on the analogy of Literary Hindi. See, however, Borrowed Tense below.

C. Irregular Verbs. These are,— hōnaũ, to become. Infinitive, hōnaũ or hwaibaũ; past participle, bhayau (masc. obl. bhayẽ, or bhaẽ, fem. bhayĩ or bhai); conj. part., hwai, hwai-kai, etc.; present, hõẽ, etc.; future, hwaibaũ, hõibaũ, hõũgau, etc. The rest is regular, except that the 2nd pl future may be hwaũgai, and the past participle is occasionally hũt dēnaũ, to give. Infinitive, dēnaũ or daihaũ, past participle, diyai or dayau (masc. obl. dayẽ, daẽ, fem. dayĩ or dei), or dēnhau or dēnau; pres. dẽũ, etc.; future, daihaũ, dẽũgau, etc.

lēnaũ, to take. Like dēnaũ, substituting l for d.

phānⁿnaũ, to appoint. Past participle, phayau (masc. obl. phayẽ, phaẽ; fem. phayĩ, phai).

karⁿnaũ, to do. Infinitive, optionally kīnaũ; past part, karyau, kīyau, kīnhau or kīnau, conj. part, kai-kai or kari-kai, future, karihaũ or kaihaũ.

jānaũ, to go. Past participle, gayau (masc. obl. gayĩ or gaẽ, fem. gayĩ or gai).

D. Passive.—This is usually formed as in standard Hindi by compounding the past participle with jānaũ. A passive is sometimes formed by adding iy to the root. Thus, māriyai, he is being beaten.

E. Borrowed Tense.—Braj Bhakṣa sometimes uses the Rājasthānī method of forming a definite present, by adding the verb substantive to the simple present instead of the present participle. Thus, instead of māratu-kau, etc, I am striking, we may have,—

| | Sing. | Plur. |
|---|------------------|------------------|
| 1 | māraũ-kau | māraĩ-kai |
| 2 | mārai-kai | mārau-kau |
| 3 | mārai-kai | māraĩ-kai |

F. Causal Verb.—This is formed by adding āw for the causal and ōw or ō for the double causal. Thus, chalⁿnaũ, to go; chalāwⁿnaũ, to cause to go; chalⁿōwⁿnaũ or chⁿōwⁿnaũ, to cause to cause to go. Sometimes āw is shortened to ō. Thus, pujāwai or pujⁿwai, he causes to be full. In the past participle, the final w is often omitted. Thus, bulāyau (for bulāwⁿyau), he called.

KANAUJĪ.

Kanaujī takes its name from the city of Kanauj, which is situated on the bank of the river Ganges in the modern district of Farukhabad. That city is one of the most ancient in India : under the name of Kanyā-kubja (the Canogyza of classical geography) it is celebrated in Sanskrit literature as early as the Rāmāyaṇa and the earlier Arab geographers describe it as the chief city of India. In the middle of the 5th century A.D. it fell into the hands of the Rāṭhōr Rajputs. The fifth monarch of this dynasty was Jaichand, who is a prominent figure in the Rājput epic of Chand Bardāi, and in the Alhā-Ūdal cycle described under the head of Bundēli. In 1193-94 Jaichand was defeated and slain by the Musalmāns, and Kanauj became a portion of the Muhammadan Empire of India. Throughout its history, the city also gave its name to its dependencies and to the surrounding district, and Kanaujī therefore means, literally, the dialect of the old kingdom of Kanauj.

At the present day, Kanaujī is spoken in its greatest purity in the Doab districts of Etawah and Farukhabad, and, north of the Ganges, in Shahjahanpur. It is also found in Cawnpore and Hardoi, but in the latter district it is more or less mixed (according to locality) with the Awadhī dialect of Eastern Hindī spoken to its east, and in the former it shows signs of the influence not only of Awadhī, but of Bundēli. North of Shahjahanpur, in Pilibhit we also find Kanaujī, but here it is mixed with Braj Bhākhā.

Kanaujī is bounded on the west and north-west by Braj Bhākhā and on the south by Bundēli. Both of these are, like Kanaujī, dialects of Western Hindī. On its east and north-east it has the Awadhī dialect of Eastern Hindī.

The area over which Kanaujī is spoken is not a large one, and near the borders it is influenced by neighbouring dialects. In the tract in which pure Kanaujī is spoken there are few variations. The only important one is that, north of the Ganges and in Cawnpore, there is a tendency to add a short i to a word ending in a consonant. Thus, dēti (masc.), not dēt, giving; bādi, not bād, after. I have already said that in Cawnpore and Hardoi the dialect is mixed. This is specially the case in Eastern Hardoi (in the Tahsil of Sandila), where it is difficult to say whether the language is Awadhī or Kanaujī. The same is the case in Cawnpore, and in that district, in the tract on the bank of the Jamna opposite the district of Hamirpur, the language is so influenced by the Bundēli of the latter district that it has a special name of its own, Tīrhārī, or the language of the river bank. There is also a Tīrhārī spoken on the opposite (southern) bank of the Jamna, which has been described under the head of Awadhī.

The number of speakers of Kanaujī is reported to be as follows :—

| Name of District. | Number of speakers. |
|-------------------------------|---------------------|
| Farukhabad | 712,500 |
| Etawah ¹ | 351,000 |

As a literary language Kanaujī has been overshadowed by its more powerful neighbour Braj Bhākhā. The district in the Kanaujī area which has produced the most famous authors is Hardoi, where the towns of Pihānī and Bilgrām, especially the latter, were the homes of many distinguished writers. Most of these were Musalmāns, and wrote in Arabic and Persian, but Hindū and Muhammadan writers in the vernacular were not wanting.

The town of Tikmapur or Tikwanpur is in the district of Cawnpore. Here, in the middle of the 17th century, flourished four celebrated brothers, Chintāmaṇi Tripāṭhī, Matirām Tripāṭhī, Bhūkhaṇ Tripāṭhī, and Nīlkaṇṭh Tripāṭhī. They were voluminous authors, and the reputation of their learning and poetic powers has survived to the present day.

The only work dealing with Kanaujī which I have seen is Mr. Kellogg's Hindi grammar. The Serampore Missionaries published a version of the New Testament in Kanaujī in the year 1821. The dialect employed differs considerably from that illustrated in the following pages.

As elsewhere stated, Kanaujī differs but slightly from Braj Bhākhā. It prefers the termination ō to the au of that dialect. ō, however, also occurs in some forms of Braj Bhākhā. Both dialects are fond of adding u to the end of nouns which in ordinary Hindōstānī terminate in a consonant. This is, perhaps, more common in Kanaujī, which also, north of the Ganges, sometimes puts i instead of u.

With reference to the accompanying skeleton grammar of Kanaujī the following additional facts may be noted :—

As in other dialects there is a tendency to drop h between two vowels. Thus, 'I will say' is kaihaū for kahihaū.

Strong masculine tadbhava adjectives (including the genitive case and participles), which in Standard Hindi end in ā, in Kanaujī end in ō. Thus, Hindi chhōṭā, Kanaujī chhōṭō, small. Strong masculine substantives, however, end in ā, and this ā is in some cases (mostly nouns of relationship) not changed to ē in the oblique singular. Thus, larikā, a son; larikā-kō (not larikē-kō), of a son.

Weak masculine tadbhavas, which in Hindi end in a silent consonant, in Kanaujī optionally end in u. Thus, Hindi ghar, Kanaujī ghar or gharu, a house. This termination u is optionally retained in the oblique singular, as, ghar-kō or gharu-kō, of a house.

As regards Demonstrative Pronouns, these are, in Standard Hindī, wah and yah, and in Bundēlī, bō and jō. Kanaujī fluctuates between the two forms. We have wahu as well as bau, he, that, and yahu as well as jau, this.

We sometimes find the past tense of a neuter verb used impersonally with the subject in the agent case. Thus, larikā-nē chalō-gaō, by the son it was gone away, i.e., the son went away. This is, of course, opposed to the rules of Standard Hindī. Note how verbs of saying, asking, etc., are used in the feminine of the past tense, agreeing with bāt understood. Thus, us-nē kahī, he said; us-nē pūchhī, he asked.

The past tenses of dēnā, lēnā and jānā are, as in Bundēlī, daō, laō, gaō. The past tense of the verb substantive is rahō, hatō, or thō. In Bundēlī it is rahō, hatō, or tō, and in Braj/Bhākhā, rahaū, hutaū, or hau.

| Obl. | gḥḍṛan | gḥaran, gḥarun, gḥaranu. | nārīn | bālan. |

Postpositions—

Agent, nā.

Acc.-Dat., kō, kā.

Abl.-Instr., sē, sētī, san, tē, tē, kari, kar-kē.

Gen., kō (obl. kē); fem. kī.

Loc., mē, maṭ, mā, mō, par, lō.

To form the plural, hōḍr or hōḍru is sometimes added to both nouns and pronouns.

The oblique plural is sometimes used in the sense of the singular. Thus, jādā dāman-kō, of great value. We sometimes meet an instrumental singular in ḍ or an, as in bhāḥḥḍ or bhāḥḥan, by hunger, and a locative in ḍ, as gḥarḍ, in a house.

Adjectives as in ordinary Hindi, except that strong masculine forms end in ḍ instead of ā.

PRONOUNS.

| | I. | Thou. | He, that. | This. | Who. | That. | Who? | What? | Anyone. |
|------------|-------------|---------------|----------------------------|---------------------------------|-----------------|-----------------|-----------------|----------|-------------------|
| Sing. Nom. | maṭ | tū | waḥu, wuḥi, uḥi, bau, baḥu | yaḥu, yiḥu, iḥu, yau, jau, jaḥu | jaun, jaunu, jō | taun, taunu, sō | kaun, kaunu, kō | kaḥā, kā | kōū, kōī, kaunau. |
| Obl. | mō | tō | uḥi, baḥi, wō | iḥi, yā | jehi, jā | tehi, tē | kehi, kē | kāḥḥ | kaunau, kīṣ. |
| Acc.-Dat. | mohi | tohi | usē, usai | isē, isai | jisē, jisai | tisē, tisai | kisē, kisai | ... | .. |
| Gen. | mērō | tērō | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| Plur. Nom. | ham | tum | wē, wai, bā | jē, jai | jaun, jō | sō | kō | ... | .. |
| Obl. | ham | tum | un, unḥḍ | in, inḥḍ | jin, jinḥḍ | tin, tinḥḍ | kin | ... | ... |

| Gen. | hamārō | tumḥārō | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |

To any of these plurals hōḍr or hōḍru may be added. Thus, ham-hōḍr, we.

'Anything' is kacḥḥḍ or kucḥḥḥḍ, indeclinable.

In the personal pronouns, the plural is often used in the sense of the singular.

The Reflexive Pronoun is ap or apu, genitive apan, apanu, or ap'nō.

II.—CONJUGATION. A. Auxiliary Verbs, and Verbs Substantive—

Present, I am.

| | Sing. | Plur. |
|---|-------------|-------------|
| 1 | hē | hai, hai-gḍ |
| 2 | hai, hai-gḍ | hō, hō-gḍ |
| 3 | hai, hai-gḍ | hai, hai-gḍ |

Past, I was. Thō or hatō, fem. thī or hatī; Plur., thē or hatē, fem. thī or hatī. Or maṭ raḥḥḍ, etc., like mārḥḍ, below.

B. Active Verb—

Infinitive,—māran, māranu, mār'nō, or māribḍ (obl. māribḥḍ), to strike.

Present Participle,—mārat or māratu, striking.

Past Participle,—mārḍ, struck.

Conjunctive Participle,—mār-kē or māri-kē, having struck.

Present Indicative and Subjunctive, I strike or I may strike.

Future, I shall strike.

| | Sing. | Plur. | Sing. | Plur. |
|---|-------------|-------|----------------------------------|-------------------|
| 1 | mārḥḍ, mārḥ | mārḥ | māriḥḍ, māriḥḍ, māriḥḥḍ, mārḥḍgḍ | māriḥḥḍ, mārḥḥḍ. |
| 2 | mārḥ | mārḥ | māriḥai, mārḥḍgḍ | māriḥḥḍ, mārḥḍgḍ. |
| 3 | mārḥ | mārḥ | māriḥai, mārḥḍgḍ | māriḥḥḍ, mārḥḍgḍ. |

Imperative.—sing. mār; plur. mārḍ; respectful, māriyḍ, māriyḥḍ. Other tenses are formed on the analogy of Braj Bhākḥā, substituting ḍ for ā in masculine terminations.

C. Irregular Verbs. These are,— ān, to become. Past participle, bhāyḍ or bhāḍ. Other forms regular.

dān, to give, and lān, to take. Past participles, dāḍ and lāḍ, respectively. Other forms regular.

gān, to go. Past participle, gayḍ or gaḍ.

maran, to die, and maran, to die, are usually regular. Thus, past participles, karḍ and marḍ.

D. and E.—The passive is formed as in Braj Bhākḥā. So also, like that dialect, Kanauji occasionally borrows its definite present from Braj.

BUNDĒLĪ OR BUNDELKHANDĪ.

As its name implies, Bundēlkhandī is the language of Bundelkhand. 'Bundēlī' signifies the language spoken by the Bundēlās, who are the principal inhabitants of that country. According to the Gazetteer of India, Bundelkhand is the tract 'lying between the river Jamna on the north, the Chambal on the north and west, the Jabalpur and Saugor Divisions of the Central Provinces on the south, and Rewa or Baghelkhand and the Mirzapur Hills on the south and east.' Politically this area includes the British districts of Banda, Hamirpur, Jalaun, and Jhansi; so much of the Gwalior Agency of Central India as consists of the home districts of the State of Gwalior, the whole of the Bundelkhand Agency, and a small portion on the west side of the Baghelkhand Agency. The area in which Bundēlī is spoken does not altogether coincide with this definition. In the first place the dialects spoken in the district of Banda are not Bundēlī. They are broken forms of the Baghēlī dialect of Eastern Hindī, and have been described under that language.¹ The River Chambal forms the northern and western boundary of the State of Gwalior. On the north, Bundēlī not only extends to that river but crosses it into the districts of Agra, Mainpuri, and Etawah, being spoken in the southern portions of each. On the west, it does not extend to the Chambal, the languages spoken in the western portion of Gwalior being Braj Bhākhā, and various forms of Rājasthānī. On the south it extends far beyond the nominal boundaries of Bundelkhand. It is spoken not only in the districts of Saugor and Damoh and in the eastern portions of Bhopal, all of which, like the south of the Bundelkhand Agency, lie on the Vindhyan plateau, but is the vernacular of the districts of Narsinghpur and Hoshangabad which lie in the Narbada Valley, and, still further south, on the Satpura plateau, of the district of Seoni. On the same plateau it is spoken in a broken form by the Lōdhīs of Balaghat and over the centre of the district of Chhindwara, and a large number of its speakers have even found their way into the great Nagpur plain and are heard speaking a mongrel patois in the district of Nagpur, the proper vernacular of which is Marāṭhī. We may say roughly that it is spoken by nearly seven millions of people, and over an area of nineteen thousand square miles.

Bundēlī is bounded on the east by the Baghēlī dialect of Eastern Hindī; on the north and north-west by the closely related Kanaujī and Braj Bhākhā dialects of Western Hindī, and, in Hamirpur, by the Tirhārī form of Baghēlī spoken on the south bank of the Jamna; on the south-west by various dialects of Rājasthānī, the most important of which is Mālwi; and on the south by Marāṭhī. It merges gradually, without any distinct boundary line, through some mixed dialects into Eastern Hindī, Kanaujī, Braj Bhākhā and Rājasthānī, but there is no merging into Marāṭhī, although there are some broken dialects which are mechanical mixtures of the two languages.

Bundēlī is, on the whole, a very homogeneous form of speech. There is one uniform type current over the greater part of the area in which it is heard. Natives, who are very quick to notice slight variations of dialect, maintain that there are two or three sub-dialects to which they have given special names, but the differences are only very unimportant local peculiarities. There are, however, towards the north of the Bundēlī tract some intermediate forms of speech which deserve notice, and there are also the broken dialects of the south. The varieties of the standard Bundēlī which are recognised by natives are called Pāwārī, Lodhāntī or Rāṭhōrā, and Khaṭōlā. Pāwārī is the dialect used in the north-east of the State of Gwalior, and in Datia and its neighbourhood, where the Pāwār Rājputs are numerous. Lodhāntī or Rāṭhōrā is the dialect spoken in the Rāṭh Pargana of Hamirpur, and the neighbouring portion of Jalaun, where the Lōdhīs are in a majority. In the heart of the Hamirpur district, and adjoining the Rāṭh Pargana, lie the Bāwan Chaurāsī Pargana of the Charkhari State, the Sarila State, and the Jigni Jagir, all falling politically under the Bundelkhand Agency. The same dialect is also spoken in them. Khaṭōlā is the form of Bundēlī spoken in the south-east of the Bundelkhand Agency and in the neighbouring part of Baghelkhand, i.e., in the Panna State and its neighbourhood. The same form of speech is also found in the adjoining district of Damoh in the Central Provinces.

The mixed dialects are Banāpharī, Kuṇḍrī, Nibhaṭṭā, on the east, shading off into Eastern Hindī, and Bhadaurī, on the west, shading off into Braj Bhākhā. Of these Banāpharī is the most important. It is spoken in the south-east of the Hamirpur district, and in the north-centre and east of the Bundelkhand Agency. Here the Banāphar Rājputs are strong, and an epic cycle celebrating their deeds, and composed in their language, is famous all over northern India. The Banāpharī sub-dialect varies somewhat from place to place, that of Hamirpur being so full of Baghēlī idioms that I have been compelled to describe it under that language (ante, Vol. VI, pp. 155 and ff.). That of the Bundelkhand Agency though borrowing freely from Baghēlī is in the main Bundēlī, and is dealt with here.¹ Kuṇḍrī is spoken on both banks of the river Ken, which separates the district of Banda from Hamirpur. The Kuṇḍrī on the Banda side of the river is based on Baghēlī, and has been described under that language (ante, Vol. VI, pp. 152 and ff.). That on the Hamirpur side is a mixed language, but its basis is Bundēlī, and therefore it is described in the following pages. Along the north side of the Hamirpur district, on the south bank of the Jamna, there is a narrow strip of country in which Tirhārī, a mixed dialect based on Baghēlī, is spoken. It has been described ante, Vol. VI, pp. 132 and ff. This Tirhārī goes on into the district of Jalaun, where it gradually merges into the standard Bundēlī of the district through a form of Bundēlī known as Nibhaṭṭā. Bhadaurī or Tōwargarhī is properly speaking the dialect spoken in Bhadāwar and Tōwargarh, on the banks of the Chambal where it separates the Gwalior State from Etawah and Agra. On the north side of the river we find it in the country near the Chambal belonging to these two districts and to Mainpurī. In Gwalior it extends right down the whole centre of the home districts of the State, having Braj Bhākhā and Rājasthānī to its west, and on its east, to the north Pāwārī (already described) and further south ordinary standard Bundēlī. Standard Bundēlī itself, which is recognised by natives as not being Pāwārī, Lodhāntī, or Khaṭōlā, is spoken in the rest of the districts of Jalaun and Hamirpur and of the Bundelkhand Agency, in Jhansi and Saugor, together with the portions of Gwalior and Bhopal immediately to their east, and in Seoni, Narsingpur, and Hoshangabad.

The broken dialects of the south are not like the mixed ones of the north, as they are not intermediate links each between two neighbouring languages. The two languages in each case are there, but as the members of each pair are not closely connected, they do not merge into each other. There is, instead, a broken patois which is a purely mechanical mixture of the two forms of speech. The speakers, who are familiar with both, sometimes use the idioms of one and sometimes of the other, and usually show so strict impartiality that in one sentence they will use the one for expressing a particular idea, and in the next will employ the other for expressing it over again. These broken dialects are Lōdhī, Kōshṭī, Kumbhārī and Nagpurī 'Hindī,' which are Bundēli mainly mixed with Marāṭhī, and the Bundēli of central Chhindwara which is mixed with ordinary Hindōstānī. Lōdhī is spoken by the members of the Lōdhī tribe who have settled in Balaghat (compare the Lodhāntī Bundēli of the north), and Kōshṭī by Kōshṭīs in Chhindwara, Chanda, and Bhandara. Kumbhārī is spoken by the Kumbhārs of Chhindwara and Buldana. Nāgpurī 'Hindī' is the so-called 'Hindī' of the district of Nagpur.

The following figures show the estimated number of speakers of the various forms of Bundēli. They are based on the census of 1891:—

Bundēli has a large literature. There is in the first place the well-known epic cycle about Ālhā and Ūdal, still sung all over northern India, and preserved by bards in the Banāpharī dialect. These heroes lived in the latter half of the twelfth century A.D. and their exploits have been the subject of verse ever since. The poet Chand Bardāi, who according to tradition was their contemporary, devoted a whole canto of his famous epic to Prithirāj's wars with the State of Mahobā, whose champions they were. Formal Bundēli literature, of the kind which the learned of India delight in, dates from at least the time of the Emperor Akbar. Kēsab Dās, the founder of vernacular rhetoric, was a native of the State of Orchha, and served as an ambassador from Indrajit Singh, its king, to that monarch. He flourished at the end of the sixteenth century, and his works are to the present day the acknowledged standard of poetical criticism for the whole of Hindōstān. From his time Bundelkhand has produced a long series of writers on poetics. From it have sprung many masters whose works are admitted authorities on the art of criticism. Perhaps the two best known are Padmākar Bhaṭṭ of Banda and Paj'nēs of Panna, both of whom flourished in the early part of the nineteenth century. All these could tell how poetry should be written, but none of them were great original poets themselves. The school of Bundelkhand shone in analysis rather than in composition. The only original writers of importance were Prān-nāth and Lāl Kabi, both of whom attended the court of Chhattarsāl of Panna in the first quarter of the eighteenth century. Prān-nāth was a religious reformer who attempted to combine Hinduism with Muhammadanism. He was a voluminous author, and wrote in a curious language, which, like his doctrine, was a compound of India and Islām. While the grammatical-structure of his language is purely vernacular, the vocabulary is mainly supplied from Persian and Arabic. Lāl Kabi wrote the Chhatra Prakāś, an account of the life of his patron Chhattarsāl and of his father Champati Rāy. It is noteworthy as one of the few original historical works written by an Indian for Indians.

Besides the above, Mr. Vincent Smith has most kindly placed at my disposal a manuscript collection of Bundēli popular songs and a series of notes on the grammar of the dialect which have been freely utilised in the following pages.

As elsewhere in Hindostan, both the Nāgarī character and its congener, the Written Character. Kaithī character, are used in writing Bundēli.

Bundēli has several words in its vocabulary which are not met with in ordinary Vocabulary. dictionaries. Some of these will be found in the specimens and in the standard List of Words and Sentences. In addition I give the following from the Bundelkhand Gazetteer :—

Bābā, baṛē bābā, a paternal grandfather.

Dāi, a grandmother.

Dādā, bhāū, bhaiyā, bāpū, a father.

Dīdī, aiyā, māi, a mother.

Dudā, a paternal uncle.

Kakihī, an aunt, the wife of a dudā.

Bhaiyā, dāū, dādā, nānā, an elder brother.

Bhōbhī, bhanjī, an elder brother's wife.

Lakurī, gutui, a younger brother's wife.

Dul'han, lagāi, mahariyā, basahī, jurūā, gotānī, a wife.

Dīdī, a sister.

Biṭiyā, buīyā, chhaunī, a daughter.

Lālā, dādū, chhaunā, būā, a son.

Phuwā, buwā, a mother's sister.

Jījū, a sister's husband.

Pāhun, nāt, a son-in-law.

Sār, sārō, a wife's brother.

Sahō, rāut, mahtaū, a father-in-law.

Bhānij, bhainē, a sister's son.

Garai, loṭiyā, a lōṭā.

Genduwā, jhāri, karōrā, a lōṭā with a spout.

Thariyā, thār, tāthī, a salver.

Baṭuwā, a brass vessel for holding water. (Hindī baṭlōhā.)

Khōrā, khōr^awā, khoriyā, beliyā, a cup. (H. kaṭōrā.)

Kop^arī, a large brass plate. (H. parāt.)

Chambū, a brass cup. (H. bēlā.)

Kal^asā, a brass water-pot. (H. gagarī.)

Tameh^arā, a copper water-pot.

Karahiyā, an iron pan.

Gāṅgal, an earthen vessel. (H. kārādār gag^arā.)

Pāṇḍabbā, a betel-box.

Sanarsī, tongs. (H. sār^asī.)

Grammar.—It is hoped that the following sketch of Bundēlī grammar will be found sufficient for understanding the specimens.

Pronunciation.—When the vowels ē and ō are shortened, they become i and u, respectively. Thus from bēṭī, a daughter, we have biṭiyā, and from ghōrō, a horse, ghur^awā, not beṭiyā and ghor^awā as in the more eastern languages. I have no proof of the existence of the short vowels e and o in Bundēlī, but it is probable that the short e occurs in words like katek, how many? The diphthong ai is commonly confused with ē, and au with ō. Judging from the specimens ē and ō seem to be the most common pronunciations. Thus we find kēhō, for kaihaū, I will say; jēhē and also jaihē, thou wilt go; and ōr, for aur, and. In the following grammatical notes, when there are authorities for both pronunciations, I shall write ē and ō respectively, it being understood that when these letters form parts of terminations they can be also written ai and au respectively. The value of other vowels is also fluctuating. Thus we find i substituted for a in birōbar, equal to, and the vowel a lengthened in rāyī, it, fem., remained. So also the word for the conjunction 'that' is indifferently written ki, kī and kē.

As regards consonants the letter r is often substituted for ṛ, as in parō, he fell, daur-kē, having run, and ghur^awā, a horse. In the word hakīgat, truth, a g has been substituted for a k. The most prominent feature, however, is the constant elision of a medial h. Thus, we have kaī or kayī, for kahī, he said; ran, for rahan, to remain; kuābē-kē lāk, for kahābē-kē lāik, fit to be called; pairā dēō, for pahirā dēō, clothe. When a long ā precedes the h, a following a is changed to u, as in chāut, for chāhat, wishing. Rahi-kē, having remained, becomes rēi-kē. Other forms of the same verb are ratī^a-haī, they, fem., remain, and raō-tō, he had remained. In this connexion, note the form bhaūt, for bahut, much. The letter y, as an initial, is unknown, its place being supplied by j. So, also, b is substituted for initial w. Thus, jō, for yah, this, and bō for wah, that.

Declension.—The use of long forms of nouns, usually in a diminutive or non-honorific sense, is very common. Masculine long forms mostly end in wā, and feminine ones in yā. Thus, we have both ghōrō and also, more commonly, ghur^awā, a horse; bēṭī, and also biṭiyā, a daughter. We also often meet redundant forms in aiva, as in bilāivā, a cat, and chirāivā, a bird.¹

¹ Theoretically, every Indo-Aryan noun can have three forms, a short, a long, and a redundant. The short form may be either weak or strong. In eastern languages, such as Bihārī, all four forms of one and the same noun are commonly found, but, so far as information is available, in the more western dialects such instances have not been recorded, although they probably occur in the mouths of villagers. As an example of these different forms, I may quote from Bihārī,—weak short form, ghōr, a horse; strong short form, ghōrd, a horse; long form ghor^awā, a horse; redundant form, ghorauwā, a horse.

Masculine tadbhava words,¹ which in Hindōstānī end in ā, in Bundēlī usually end in ō. Thus, Hindōstānī, ghōṛā, but Bundēlī, ghōrō, a horse. The only exceptions which I have noted are some nouns of relationship, such as daddā, a father; mōṛā, a son; kakkā, an uncle; and long forms like ghur^oicā.

The feminine often has nī where standard Hindōstānī has in, as in tēlⁿnī, an oilman's wife, but Hindōstānī tēlin. So hur^okinī, a harlot.

The declension of nouns closely follows that of Hindōstānī. Masculine tadbhavas in ō form their oblique form singular, and usually their nominative plural, in ē. The oblique plural ends in an. We thus get the following forms of ghōrō, a horse.

| Singular. | | Plural. |
|-----------|--------------|-----------------|
| Direct, | ghōrō | ghōrē . |
| Oblique, | ghōrē | ghōran . |

Other masculine nouns remain unchanged in the singular, and in the nominative plural, but form the oblique plural by adding an. This is the general rule, but some nouns in ā form the nominative plural in ā, or even in an. Thus, hinnā, a deer, nom. plur., hinnā; kuttā, a dog, nom. and obl. plural, kuttan. Feminine long forms in iyā form the nominative plural in iyā, and the oblique plural in ian. Other feminine nouns form the nominative plural in ē, or, if they end in i, in ī, and the oblique plural in an or in. All feminine nouns remain unchanged in the singular. Examples of these forms taken from the specimens are :—

| Singular. | | Plural. | |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------|----------------------------|-------------------------------|
| Direct. | Oblique. | Direct. | Oblique. |
| Lōrō , younger | lōrē | lōrē | lōran . |
| Daddā , a father | daddā | daddā | daddan . |
| Ku-karm , a bad action | ku-karm | ku-karm | ku-karman . |
| Chākar , a servant | chākar | chākar | chāk^ran . |
| Sāṛ , a bull | sāṛ | sāṛan | sāṛan . |
| Rahāiyā , a dweller | rahāiyā | rahāiyā | rahāiyan . |
| Nugariā , a finger | nugariā | nugariā | nugarian . |
| Hur^okinī , a harlot | hur^okinī | hur^okinī | hur^okinin . |
| Gat^okī , a thump | gat^okī | gat^okī | gat^okin . |

Sometimes we meet ordinary Hindōstānī forms, as bātē, words; hētiō-kē sang, with friends; pāō-mē, on feet. Note also the forms gharē, in a house; bhūkhan-kē mārē, through hunger.

Cases are made as usual by postpositions. The following are the principal. The sign of the agent case is nē or nē. That of the accusative and dative is kō or khō; of the ablative sē, sē, or sō; and of the locative mai or mē. Lai or lānē is 'for.' The usual suffix of the genitive is kō; obl. masc., kē; fem. dir. and obl., kī. The termination khō is also apparently sometimes used to form an oblique genitive, as in tā-khō pichhē, after that. Unless the words are mistake of the writer, as they probably are, we have in one case, nāch-kē bōl sunō, I heard the sound of dancing, an oblique genitive used instead of a direct one. Either kē or sunō must be wrong.

Tadbhava adjectives in ō change in the same way as the suffixes of the genitive. The oblique masculine ends in ē, and their feminine, direct and oblique, in i. Thus, śaḅ^orō, all; obl. masc. śaḅ^orē; fem. śaḅ^orī.

The following are the forms of the two first personal pronouns :—

Singular.

|-------|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Nom. | mē, mē̃, maĩ, I | tũ, taĩ, thou |
| Agent | maĩ-nē | taĩ-nē |
| Gen. | mō-kō, mērō, mōrō, mōnō | tō-kō, tērō, tōrō, tōnō |
| Obl. | mōy, mōē, mō | tōy, tōē, tō |

Plural.

| | | |
|------|------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Nom. | ham | tum |
| Gen. | ham-kō, hamārō, hamāō | tum-kō, tumārō, tumāō |
| Obl. | ham | tum |

‘He’ or ‘that’ is bō or ũ, ‘she’ is bā. The obl. sing. of both is bā, ā, ũ or tā. ‘To him’ is bāy or bāē. The nom. plur. is bē, and the obl. plur. is bin or un. These are all the forms which are vouched for by the specimens. Others probably occur.

‘This’ and ‘who’ are both jō (fem. jā), obl. sing. jā, nom. plur. jē. No forms of the oblique plural occur in the specimens. ‘This’ is also ē, with an oblique plural in.

‘Your Honour’ is āp, with a dative apan-khō. ‘Own’ is ap^onō. All these genitives undergo the usual modifications. Thus, the feminine of mērō is mērī and of ap^onō, ap^onī.

Kā, obl. kāyē, is ‘what?’ Kōū, obl. kāū, anyone; kachhū, anything; katek, kitek or kai, how many?

CONJUGATION.

A.—Auxiliary Verbs and Verbs Substantive.

Present, I am.

| 1. hō, āũ, or āw | hē, āy |
| 2. hē, āy | hō, āw |
| 3. hē, āy | hē, āy |

SING. PLUR.

| Masc. | Fem. | Masc. | Fem. |
|-----------------------|-----------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| 1. hatō, or tō | hatī, tī | hatē, tē | hatī, tī |
| 2. hatō, tō | hatī, tī | hatē, tē | hatī, tī |
| 3. hatō, tō | hatī, tī | hatē, tē | hatī, tī |

Other forms are huhō, or hōũ-gō, I will be; huē, it may be; bhaō, fem. bhayī, masc. plur. bhayē, he became; naīyā, I am not; naīyā, he is not, and so on; bhaē nā chahiyē, ought not to become.

B. Active Verbs.—Māran, to strike. Infinitive and Verbal Noun māran and mār^obō; obl. mār^obē; also mārē. Present Participle, mārat. Past Participle, mārō.

Present Subjunctive, I may strike.

|----------------|-------------|
| 1. mārũ | mārē |
| 2. mārē | mārō |
| 3. mārē | mārē |

Future, I shall strike.

| Sing. | Plur. |
|------------------|---------------|
| 1. mārihō | mārihē |
| 2. mārihē | mārihō |
| 3. mārihē | mārihē |

In the future the vowel a is often substituted throughout for i, thus, mār^hhō. Another form of the future is made by adding gō to the present subjunctive. The gō is liable to change for gender and number. Thus—

| SINGULAR. | | PLURAL. | |
|--|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| Masc. | Fem. | Masc. | Fem. |
| First Person, mār^hgō | mār^hgī | mār^hgē | mār^hgī | and so on for the other persons.

Present Definite, mārat-hō or mārat-āw, I am striking. The auxiliary verb is commonly omitted, so that the present participle alone serves for all persons and both numbers.

Imperfect, mārat-hatō, or mārat-tō, etc., I was striking. The auxiliary changes according to the gender and number of the subject.

Imperative.—This is the same as the Present Subjunctive, except that the second person singular is mār.

Tenses formed from the Past Participle.—In the case of transitive verbs, these tenses are construed passively, exactly as in Hindōstānī, the subject being put in the case of the agent with nē. Thus, maĩ-nē mārō, I struck; maĩ-nē mārō-tō, I had struck.

Irregularities.—Verbs whose roots end in ā generally form the present participle in āt. Thus, jāt, going. Some, however, insert a u. Thus, chāut, wishing, āut, coming. So also raūt, remaining. Dēn, to give, and lēn, to take, make dēt and lēt.

The verb karan, to do, makes its past participle regularly. Thus, karō. The past participle of dēn, to give, is daō; of lēn, to take, laō; and of jān, to go, gaō. In forming the feminine and the plural these generally insert y. Thus, dayī, dayē. Note that in the past tense, the verb kan, to say, is always put in the feminine to agree with bāt understood. Thus, kayī, or kaī, he said. Note in this connexion the phrase rāyī kā, literally, what remained?, which is used as a kind of expletive meaning ‘thereupon.’

An example of a desiderative form is bharō chāut-tō, he was wishing to fill. An example of an inceptive compound is ran lagō, he began to remain.

The conjunctive participle ends in kē or lē. Thus, mār-kē, or mār-kē, having struck.

The case of the agent is used with some laxity in the specimens. Thus, we have it used with intransitive verbs in bā-nē baiṭhō, he sat; bā-nē lagō, he began. In bā-nē chāut-tō, he was wishing, we even have it used before a tense formed from the present participle.

LITERARY HINDŌSTĀNĪ.

The first specimen is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in pure Thēth Hindōstānī by the late Mahāmahōpādhyāya Paṇḍit Sudhākara Dwivedī, F.A.U. It is capable of being written in, and is perfectly legible in, both the Dēva-nāgarī and the Persian characters. In order to show this, it is printed in both characters.

Although in Thēth Hindī it will be observed that it contains one or two foreign words, such as the Persian baḵhara, a share, and the Sanskrit pāpa, sin. Such words are included because, although foreign, they are in daily use in everybody's mouths. They have attained to full right of citizenship.

किसी मानुस के दो बेटे थे । उन में से लहुरे बेटे ने बाप से कहा हे बाप आप के धन में जो मेरा बखरा हो उसको मुझे दे दीजिये । तब उसने अपना धन उनमें बाँट दिया । बहुत दिन नहीं बीते, कि लहुरा बेटा सब कुछ बटोर दूर देस चला गया और वहाँ लुचपन में दिन बितावते अपना धन उड़ा दिया । जब वह सब कुछ उड़ा चुका तब उस देस में अकाल पड़ा और वह कंगाल हो गया । तब वह उस देस के किसी भले मानुस के यहाँ जाकर रहने लगा जिसने उसको अपने खेत में सूअर चराने को भेजा । और वह चाहता था, कि मैं अपना पेट उन छीमियों से भरूँ जिन्हें सूअर खाते हैं पर कोई उसको कुछ नहीं देता था । तब उसको चेत हुआ और कहने लगा, कि मेरे बाप के यहाँ इतनी अल्लेख रोट्टी होती हैं कि कितने मजूर पेट भर खाते हैं और बचाय भी रखते हैं और मैं भूखा मरता हूँ । मैं उठता हूँ और बाप के पास जाकर यही कहूँगा कि हे बाप मैं ने भगवान की विमुख और आप के सामने पाप किया । मैं फिर आप का बेटा कहे जाने योग नहीं । मुझको अपने मजूरों में से एक की नाई रखिये । तब वह उठ

कर अपने बाप के पास चला । पर वह दूर ही था, कि उसके बाप ने उसको देख कर दायी कौ, और दौड़ कर उसके गले में लिपट गया और उसको चूमने लगा । बेटे ने कहा हे बाप मैं ने भगवान के बिमुख और आप के सामने पाप किया और आप का बेटा कहे जाने जोग नहीं । पर बाप ने अपने चाकरोँ में से एक से कहा, कि सब से अच्छा कपड़ा इसको पहिनाओ और हाथ में अँगूठी और पावों में जूते । और चलो हम लोग खायँ और बेलसेँ । क्योंकि यह बेटा मरा ऐसा था फिर से जीया है हेराय गया था फिर मिला है । तब वे सुख से बेलसने लगे ॥

had-been, again found is.'

I next give an extract from the Kahānī Thēṭh Hindī-mē, the celebrated story of the loves of Prince Udai Bhān and the Princess Kētakī, by Inshā Allāh Khān, who flourished at Lucknow in the early part of the nineteenth century. The passage given is the Preface. In this the author explains that his intention is to write a composition in the idiom used by the better class of people, meaning by this the Urdū of Lucknow, but with a vocabulary which rigorously excludes all words of foreign origin, and which is drawn entirely from Hindūī, i.e. the speech of Hindūs. As a tour de force, his success has been complete. The work is a treasury of words in everyday use amongst the people of Hindōstān, many of which will not be found in any dictionary. On the other hand, as a model of style, it can only rank as a curiosity. The style is that of the Persianised Urdū current in Lucknow, not that of a true Indian language. The verb is commonly in the middle of the sentence, for instance ragar'tā-hū in the very first clause. Again, the metres used for the poetry are Persian, not Hindī. As explained elsewhere, Hindū scholars class a language as Urdū or Hindī, not according to its vocabulary, but according to the idiom—especially the order of the words,—employed. Hence, although from beginning to end Inshā Allāh's tale does not contain a single Persian word, they universally deny that it is written in Hindī. To them it is written in Urdū and in nothing else.

I give the extract in two characters, in the Persian in which it was originally published, and also in the Dēva-nāgarī. Anyone capable of studying it will be able to read it in one or other of these characters, and I therefore give no transliteration. I append a translation based on that of Mr. Clint, but more literal.

The whole work was published (with a good many misprints) in Vols. XXI and XXIV of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. The first section was translated by Mr. L. Clint, and the second by Mr. S. Slater. It has been more than once reprinted in Bāzār presses in India. A satisfactory text has not yet been issued. I have, in the main, followed that of Mr. Clint, with a few alterations based on other information.

TRANSLATION.

Having bowed my head, I rub my nose (in the dust) before Him, my Maker, by whom we all were made, and by whom in an instant¹ were revealed all those things of which the secret had hitherto been found by none.

Each breath that comes and goes,

Without meditation on Him, would be a noose for our necks.

How shall this puppet, that holds in remembrance the Being that makes it dance, fall into any difficulty (lit. sourness)? How shall bitterness and astringency be met with? It is the sweetness of this fruit which thou shouldst taste, as thy forefathers have tasted of excellence from their elders.²

For seeing He gave the eyes, and for hearing the ears. The nose also He made prominent amongst all (the features). On our forms bestowed He a soul. Where has a vessel of clay so much power as will enable it to declare the skill of its potter? Of a truth, how can that which is created praise its Creator, and what can it say? Let him who thus would do, babble in vain, (but as for me,) if every hair of the down upon my body from head to feet were each to speak and to continue glorifying, and were to remain rapt in that case for as many years as there are sands in all the rivers and blossoms and pods in the fields, even then they could not accomplish aught.

With this bowing of my head, I also prostrate myself day and night before that Friend³ of the Giver, far advanced (in favour), on whose account it was said, 'if Thou hadst not been, I would have created nothing.' And of his cousin ('Alī), whose marriage was contracted in his family, the remembrance has always been with me. (As I remembered him), I exulted, and could not contain myself. And as many children as there are of him, to them alone am I devoted.⁴ Whoever else there may be, he pleases not my heart. Beyond the pale of this family, what have I to do with any vagabond, sharper, thief, or robber? While I live, and while I die, on all these alone and on their house, day and night, do I place my hope.

THE FOUNDATION⁵ OF A WONDROUS TALE.

One day, while I was sitting doing nothing, it came into my thought to write a story in which there should not appear the employment⁶ of any language except Hindūī. Having taken this resolution, my heart expanded like a flower-bud. No foreign words or rustic expressions were to appear in it. Of those who heard (my intention), a few great scholars, old-fashioned curmudgeons, wily old rascals, introduced a cats' concert,⁷ wagging their heads, screwing their faces, lifting up their noses and eyebrows, petrifying their eyes, and began to say, 'we don't see how this thing can be. That

² There is a pun here, which cannot be translated. Bar̄ḍ-s̄ bar̄ḍī means literally 'greatness from the great.'

³ Muḥammad.

⁵ Ḍaul is 'method, manner, appearance, shape.' But Ḍaul Ḍāl'nā is 'to lay a foundation.'

⁷ Kāṭ-rāg is literally 'six tunes' (played at once). Hence 'discord.' It corresponds exactly to the cats' concerts of our schoolboy days. Ākhō path'rānā is to turn the eyes to stone (patthar), to give a stony stare.

the quality of Hindui should not appear, that the quality of local dialects should not slip in, that the style in use among the better sort of people, the super-excellent, which they employ amongst themselves, should under such conditions remain as it always was, and that neither of these (two faults) should be reflected in it,—that is impossible.'

I took offence at the difficulties raised by their cold sighs (of discouragement), and replied with some irritation, 'I have said nothing so very wonderful. If I show you a grain of mustard seed and try to persuade you that it is a mountain; if I play a pantomime with my fingers and call the false true; if I construct entangled and unconnected sentences without measure or moderation; if (in short) I cannot do (what I propose), then, well and good; (you are quite right to ask me) why I let such words issue from my mouth. (Let us judge by results.) In what way soever it is effected, an end is put to the dispute.'

The narrator of this story here declares himself, and to that degree in which some people proclaim him (in the way of praise), speaks conformably. Passing the right hand over the face (in consideration), I explain myself. Whatever my Benefactor willed, that, whether it is gestures and hints,¹ or coming and going, or leaping and jumping, or struggling and striving, will I show. Immediately on seeing which, the steed of your fancy, which is much faster even than lightning, and which in his bound is like the deer, will be lost in amazement.²

Mounting my horse I come.

The skill I have I show it all.

Whatever He who wished did wish, that, at once,

In whatever I may say, do I show forth.

Do you now give ear, and turning towards me, look for a moment in my direction. See in what manner I progress, and what sort of flowers I disclose from the petals of my lips.

² Chaukārī is the bound off all four legs at once, taken by a deer. Hence 'to forget one's bound' is 'to be lost in amazement.'

The next specimen is an extract from the Thēth Hindī-kā Thāth, a short novel by Paṇḍit Ayōdhyā Singh Upādhyāy. It is an admirable specimen of the true Hindōstānī language, free from any admixture of borrowed words, whether Persian or Sanskrit. This pathetic story, illustrating Hindū life in northern India, is well worth the study of everyone who wishes to master the real language spoken by the people of the Upper Doab, which is at the same time readily intelligible wherever Hindōstānī is employed as a lingua franca. This is more than can be said either for the Persianised Urdū of Maulvis, or for the Paṇḍit-ridden Hindī of Benares.

It has been published both in the Dēva-nāgarī and in the Persian characters, and both editions are here given. I append a fairly literal translation. The Indian idiom, it will be observed, is retained throughout. There is none of the Persian order of words which we have observed in the preceding specimen.

TRANSLATION.

A girl of eleven years of age is standing in the garden by her house watching for someone to come. The sun is about to set, the clouds are suffused with red, a gentle breeze is giving coolness to her spirit. In a short time the sun set, and, just as it was beginning to be dusky, someone became visible approaching, from another side of the garden, that side where the girl was standing. In a little while he came and stood by her. When the girl saw him she said, 'Dēonandan, where have you been all this time? I have been standing here a long while waiting for you.'

Dēonandan is a youth of fourteen or fifteen years. To look at his well-favoured fair-complexioned face, shapely hands and feet, slender form, high and broad forehead, long arms, and large heart-attracting eyes, you would think that Jayanta, the son of Indra, had himself descended from heaven and come down to the earth. He really belonged to the same village as that in which the girl lived, and from babyhood they had been fond of each other. Every third or fourth day, as he found an opportunity, Dēonandan would come to see her, and she, too, would meet him with the greatest affection, and with her sweet, sweet, words would attract his soul. The girl knew that Dēonandan would come that day, and for this reason had been looking out for him. He did come, but it was a little late, and that is why she said to him, 'Dēonandan, where have you been all this time?'

LUCKNOW LITERARY URDŪ.

The following specimen is in the Persianised Literary Urdū of Lucknow. The preference for Persian words instead of indigenous ones is manifest from the first sentence.

Notice, too, the preference for the Persian order of words with the verb in the middle, not at the end of the sentence, and the subject after the object. Hindī, or indeed any pure Indo-Aryan language, will not tolerate sentences like chalā āyā bāp-kē pās, he went to his father. The true Indian order would be bāp-kē pās chalā āyā. Again the order of the phrase ēk naukar-kō us-nē pūchhā is not truly Indian. The Indian order would be us-nē ēk naukar-kō (or -sē) pūchhā, the subject preceding the object.

The specimen (which is a version of the Parable) is given in the Persian character. As it is a good specimen of Urdū handwriting, it is given in facsimile, and not in type.

QAṢBĀTĪ URDŪ OF LUCKNOW.

The preceding specimen has illustrated the high, literary style of Lucknow Urdū. We now proceed to give specimens of the ordinary Urdū spoken in the city. It is known as qaṣbātī, from qaṣbāt, the plural of qaṣba, a quarter of a town.

It is not so highly Persianised as the literary dialect, but possesses the typical order of words which Urdū has borrowed from Persian. Thus we have jānīb dakhin, in the southern direction, the Indian order of which would be dakhinjānīb. Similarly, kinārē daryā-e Saī-kē, instead of daryā-e Saī-kē kinārē, on the bank of the river Saī.

I give two specimens of this form of Urdū. The first is a short passage of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which I give in transliteration only, merely for the purpose of comparison with the literary dialect. The other is a folk-tale about the temple of Bhaūrēsar in Nigōhā. It is given in the Persian character, with full transliteration and translation.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

To the south of the town of Nigōhā there is a temple of Mahādēo, which people call Bhaūrēsar, and is situated on the bank of the river Saī. A fair is held there every Monday, and every day there is a stream of people who come to visit the image, in the belief that this act of worship will lead to the fulfilment of all the desires of their hearts.

The story goes that the Emperor Aurangzēb once visited the temple of this deity, and gave orders that the image should be dug up and taken out of the temple. He sent several hundred labourers, but no matter how deep they dug, they could not find the bottom of the image. Enraged at this, the Emperor ordered the image to be broken in pieces. The labourers commenced the work and gave it one or two blows. In doing so they damaged it slightly, and the marks of this are visible to the present day. A few drops of blood also issued from the image. But this indignity only served to make manifest the supernatural power which existed in the idol. Thousands of hornets issued from below it, and put the Emperor's army of men to flight. When this was told to him he said, 'very well, from this day let this image be known as Bhaūrēsar, or the Lord of Hornets, and let the earth be filled in so as to restore it to the same condition as that in which it was before.' He then himself saw that the arrangements for restoring the image to its original condition were carried out.

For a long time not only have people visited this shrine to pay homage to the deity, but a number of shopkeepers have set up shops in the locality. They sell not only the ordinary stock in trade but also everything that is necessary for village life.

BĒGAMATĪ URDŪ OF LUCKNOW.

The form of Urdū employed by respectable Musalmān ladies of Lucknow City is known as Bēgamatī. It is said to be very free from any Hindī admixture, but this statement is not borne out by the specimens which I have received.

Two specimens are given. The first is a transliterated text of a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, for comparison with the other Urdū versions. The other is a letter written by a Musalmān lady of Lucknow to her mother. It is an admirable specimen of this dialect, full of quaint idioms and vivid expressions. I give it in facsimile of the original manuscript, together with a transliteration and translation. The writing of the manuscript is in the ordinary broken Urdū running hand.

Note that Persian and Arabic words ending in a short a are not inflected for the oblique cases, as the grammars tell us should be done. Thus, Khānam Sāhibā (not -bē)-kē, (by the son) of the Khānam Sāhibā; chha mahīna (not -nē)-kā bachcha, a baby of six months. This is a common irregularity of writing, which, however, does not affect the pronunciation. These oblique forms are pronounced as if ending in ē. Sāhibā-kē is pronounced Sāhibē-kē, and so on.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A LETTER FROM A DAUGHTER TO HER MOTHER.

DEAREST MOTHER,

May God ordain that you ever remain in safety. Sister Jhamman arrived today in Lucknow, and from her we have heard how you are getting on. The elder uncle's health is daily getting worse and worse. He has been trying all kinds of medicine here in Lucknow, but they don't seem to do him any good. So, if the moon becomes visible tomorrow, he will certainly set out on Thursday for Faizabad to be treated by the doctors there.

Nowadays there is a big gang of thieves about. Yesterday, in broad daylight, a number of them got into the house of the Khānam Ṣāhibā, who lives close by us. There was a great hue and cry, and the fools of police, useless as a boor's cudgel which neither knows nor understands, directly they heard the outcry, made straight for our house. You may indeed say that we were fortunate, for by great good luck there was a man standing at our hall-door who stopped them. Otherwise all we women in the zanāna would have been exposed to view. Two of the thieves were caught, and the idiots, when they came before the magistrate, brought a countercharge that the Khānam Ṣāhibā's son had invited them into the house under the pretext of getting the building valued. They added that he had imprisoned them for some six hours, had robbed them of fifty rupees, and had then got rid of them by calling out 'thief, thief.'

You will be sorry to hear that Nazīr and his wife keep on their daily quarrelling. You know Nazīr, what sort of man he is, going about with his nose in the air. His wife, too, is overweening, and starts a wrangle on ever so little a matter. I've reasoned with her thousands of times,—'sister dear, there's inexperienced company. There's a young marriageable girl sitting close to your side. What good will come from all this nonsense and talk, all this teeth-gnashing by day and by night, in her presence?' May God's curse rest on such silly-wits. The more one remonstrates, the more she wrangles. Who is there to interfere, with the certainty of having some rude thing said in return?

Just look at Aulād 'Alī's conduct. Without saying a word, nay, for absolutely no reason, he has quarrelled with his mother, and gone off to stay with his grandfather.

Bēgam Jān's six-months' old little baby, which she had been nursing with such loving care, died the day before yesterday. Poor creature, when she presses together the lids of a single eye, a hundred thousand tears fall. It is only four months since her husband died, and now, again, the sky has fallen in upon her. The poor thing's one remaining consolation is now broken.

STANDARD URDŪ OF DELHI.

The Urdū of Delhi is less Persianised than that of Lucknow, and hence more nearly fulfils the requirements of a lingua franca intelligible over the whole of India. This will be evident from the following specimen (the authorised Urdū version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, as issued under the auspices of the British and Foreign Bible Society). It will be seen that the vocabulary is on the whole simple, and that the Indian, and not the Persian, order of words is preferred. For another example of Delhi Urdū, the Urdū List of Standard Words and Sentences, which was prepared in that city, may be consulted.

The original Urdū version of the New Testament was made for the British and Foreign Bible Society by Henry Martyn during the years 1806-1810. It has been thrice revised. The version of the Parable now given is taken from the third and last revision carried out by a committee headed by Dr. Weitbrecht during the years 1893-1899.

The Bible Society has issued this version under two forms,—one in the Persian character, and the other in the Roman character. I give both here. The system of transliteration used by the Bible Society differs somewhat from that employed in the present Survey, but this will give rise to no difficulty.

It is not necessary to give an interlinear translation.

 کہ میرے باپ کے کتنے ہی مزدوروں کو روٹی افراط سے ملتی ہے -
 اور میں یہاں بھوکھا مر رہا ہوں - میں اُٹھ کر اپنے باپ کے پاس
 جاؤنگا اور اُس سے کہوں گا کہ آئے باپ - میں آسمان کا اور تیری نظر
 میں گنہگار ہوا - اب اس لائق نہیں رہا کہ پھر تیرا بیٹا کہلاؤں -
 مجھے اپنے مزدور جیسا ہی کر لے - پس وہ اُٹھ کر اپنے باپ کی طرف
 روانہ ہوا - وہ ابھی دور ہی تھا کہ اُسے دیکھ کر اُس کے باپ کو ترس

MODERN URDŪ OF DELHI.

During the last thirty or forty years a school of writers has arisen in Delhi, which has paid attention to the necessity of avoiding the extreme Persianisation of style which had hitherto been fashionable, and which is still fashionable in Lucknow.

The author of this school who has obtained the greatest reputation is Maulavi Nazir Ahmad. Two novels by this writer, the Mir'ātu 'l-'Arūs (The Bride's Mirror), and the Taubatu 'n-Naṣūḥ (The Repentance of Naṣūḥ), have been edited in England. They are well worth reading, not only as introductions to the Urdū language, but for their contents. They are admirable pictures of the home life of respectable Indian Musalmāns of the middle class. The stories are absolutely unobjectionable and full of interest, and are illumined by many pages of true humour. An account of the best editions of these works will be found in the Bibliography under the name of their author, and for further information regarding the school of writers to which he belongs, the reader is referred to Shēkh 'Abdu 'l-Qādir's work on 'The new School of Urdū Literature' quoted in the first section of the Bibliography.

As a specimen of Nazir Ahmad's style, I give an extract from the Mir'ātu 'l-'Arūs. The text is taken from Mr. G. E. Ward's edition in Roman characters (London, 1899). The passage selected is a cock-and-bull story, freely interlarded with pious phrases, told by a swindling old crone to the silly heroine, on whom she is playing the confidence trick. The story is à propos of two miraculous (but quite unnecessary) cloves, which the old lady presents to the year-old bride, and which are guaranteed to restore a husband's love and to give children to the most unloved of barren wives. The reader who is curious as to the sequel is referred to the original work. Suffice it here to say that the old lady having gained the bride's confidence, successfully decamps with all her jewelry.

Considering that the novel is written by a Musalmān for his co-religionists, and is professedly in Urdū, not in Hindī, it is remarkably free from Arabic and Persian expressions. In Lucknow Urdū, nearly every word would hail from one or other of these sources. Here fully forty-five per cent of the vocabulary is Indian, about twenty per cent is Persian, and less than 34 per cent is Arabic. The small remainder comes from other languages,—Turkish, English, and Portuguese.*

* I am indebted to Mr. Ward, the editor of the Mir'ātu 'l-'Arūs, for these particulars. I would strongly recommend everyone who is interested in the great Lingua Franca of India or its literature to read this edition of a highly original and amusing work. The perusal is rendered easy to Europeans by its being in the Roman character, and every assistance is given by an excellent vocabulary and by notes when necessary. An English translation by Mr. Ward is published as a separate work.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

When I went on my pilgrimage to Mecca I had for a fellow-passenger a Bēgam of Bhōpāl,—perhaps you have heard of her, her name was Balqīs Jahānī Bēgam. God had endowed her with every blessing. As for her wealth, there was no end to it. She had troops of servants, women slaves and men slaves, palanquins and litters,—everything, in fact, which she could want. But she had an aching heart about her prospects of a family,—she had no children,—and besides this, the Nawāb Sāhib, her husband, had altogether ceased to show her any affection. This latter grief was probably due to her being childless, for, as to her personal appearance, as the saying goes, ‘when she wasn’t as bright as the sun she was as fair as the moon;’ and to this beauty and wealth was added a disposition of the purest sincerity and simplicity,—even nobodies like us she would ask to sit down beside her, and talk with them.

Now, she had the greatest faith in wandering mendicants, and once she heard that a certain holy saint had arrived at a place some six miles away. So one dark night she started off on foot from her house and stood a good three hours in front of him with folded hands. My life for the fame of such holy men! On one occasion when this one lifted his eyes he saw her and said, ‘go, madam, this very night will you receive a command from above.’ That night she had a dream, in which she heard a voice saying, ‘depart on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and gather the pearl of your desire from the ocean.’ The first thing in the morning she began the preparations for her pilgrimage. She paid the fares of five hundred poor people, amongst whom I was one, and took them on board the ship with her. She always kept me by her side and (O God, may her face be bright in this world and the next) not only began she to show great friendship to me but even used to address me as ‘comrade.’ The ship went on straight through the sea for ten days, and on the eleventh a mountain came in sight in the middle of the ocean. ‘That,’ said the captain, ‘is the Mountain of Ethiopia, and on it there dwells a holy hermit. There never was a petitioner who went to him that did not have his prayer granted.’ Said the Bēgam to him, ‘you must get me in some way or other to that mountain.’ ‘Your Ladyship,’ replied he, ‘there is not enough water for the ship to go alongside, but, if you wish it, I can have the anchor let go and send you ashore in the jolly-boat.’ ‘That will do excellently,’ said she. So five women (myself and four others) went off with her to the Mountain of Ethiopia. When we got there we found the air filled with a wondrous fine odour. We came at length to where His Holiness lived. It was a very place where God alone dwells. Not a man or son of man was there. In his house abode His Holiness in perfect solitude. What a serene appearance he displayed! Like an angel of heaven! As soon as he saw us all he blessed us. To the Bēgam he gave twelve cloves and, after reciting something, breathed over her. To me he said, ‘depart and busy yourself with bringing about the desires of the people of Agra and Delhi.’

Daughter, here are two of those twelve cloves!

Now, when we came home from our pilgrimage, the Nawāb,—who formerly had not taken the slightest interest in the Bēgam,—must needs go down to Bombay a month before the ship was due, and wait there for his wife in order to escort her home. She had hardly got off the gangway before he fell at her feet, and with many tears asked pardon for his neglect. After I came back from the journey I stayed for six years in Bhōpāl, and while I was there, all owing to the power of the holy man's blessing, one by one, the Bēgam had four sons. By this time I began to think of my own country, and asked her for leave to go away. She would not hear of it, but I reminded her of how His Holiness had made over to me the care of Agra and Delhi, and that I really must go. When she heard this, she had perforce to allow me to depart.

URDŪ POETRY.

As a specimen of Urdū poetry of the classic period (as elsewhere explained standard Hindī has no old poetical literature), I give an extract from the Tanbīhu 'l-juhhāl, or Admonition to Fools, by the celebrated Mīr Taqī. This poet was born at Agra, and studied at Delhi under Sirāju 'd-dīn Khān ('Arzū). He lived there up to the year 1782, when he migrated to Lucknow, where he died at a very advanced age in 1710. He and Rafī'u 's-sandā are considered by native authorities to be the two greatest Urdū poets.

An elegant paraphrase of the poem, under the title of Conseils aux mauvais poètes, was published by Garcin de Tassy on pp. 300 and ff. of Vol. vii of the Journal Asiatique (1825). An Italian translation of this paraphrase was published at Palermo in 1891 by Signor Pugliese Pico, under the title of Consigli ai cattivi poeti. Monsieur J. Vinson published a more literal translation, under the title of Satire contre les Ignorants in the Revue de Linguistique, Vol. xxiv (1891), pp. 101 ff.

Mīr Taqī's works have been printed in India. The text of the poem under consideration is carefully edited by Shakespear in his Muntakhabāt-e Hindī. This text has been reproduced in Monsieur Vinson's Manuel de la Langue hindoustani. The text given here is based on that of Shakespear, with a few corrections rendered necessary by the metre. I have to thank Mr. G. E. Ward for assistance rendered in translating this not always easy poem.

We may note a few points in which the language of the poem differs somewhat from the language of the standard grammars. In barguzīda-nē, by the Elect One (verse 28), the oblique form ends in a, not ē. This may, however, be a mere matter of spelling, for most scribes in such cases write a final a, but pronounce it ē. In verse 28 we have an example of the custom which at the present day prevails in Lucknow of treating samjhā as if it were a neuter verb. In verse 13 we have dē-hai, which is the dialectic form in the Upper Doab for dētā-hai, he gives. In verse 25 we have rukhsat construed with a masculine verb. Note also the spelling of muj-kō, instead of mujh-kō in verse 14.

In the transliteration, I have marked the vowels as long or short, as is required by the metre, so as to assist the scansion, and not according to their natural length. Hā'ī and hā'ī are each to be counted as one short syllable. A syllable containing a short vowel, and ending in a consonant, is long, if the next syllable begins with a consonant. Thus, in the second verse, because tā follows ishārat, the latter word is scanned — — —. But if such a syllable is followed by a vowel, it may be either long or short. Thus, in the first verse, din āyā is scanned — — —, while in the third verse, 'izzat ō is scanned — — —. Note also that a syllable like ēk, consisting of a vowel naturally long followed by a silent consonant, or a syllable like she'r, containing a short vowel followed by two silent consonants, counts as two syllables, and is scanned as a trochee (— —), if followed by another syllable commencing with a consonant. Thus, in the first verse, ēk din is scanned — — —, and in the fifth verse, she'r-kī taqrīb lā-kar is scanned — — — — —. A long final vowel is often shortened, and the Persian iqāfat (e) may be long or short as required by the metre.

Passionately devoted to the Muses was the Wazīr of Ispahan, and one day Hilālī¹ approached his palace. Informed by the gate-porters of the poet's arrival, the minister made a sign that he should be admitted into the audience-hall² of the palace. The greatest honour and respect were shown to him; His Highness called him up, caused him to sit rejoicing on the throne by his side, and made a point of addressing him as often as possible by the title of 'Prince.' After they had sat together for a long time, night fell, and then the Wazīr turned the conversation on to the subject of poetry, and proceeded to test his visitor's poetic powers. Hilālī recited some of his verses, and, in doing so, made a false quantity. Directly he heard it His Highness burst forth like a flame, and, in a rage, he cried, 'what ho there! A sweeper, and a rod!' He dragged him out into the palace grounds, and there gave him such a thorough drubbing, that he fell like a breathless corpse upon the ground with limbs numb and swollen like pillars.

When the news spread through every bāzār that Hilālī had been dragged about and dashed down in the very audience-hall his people came and carried him home by night. After he came to himself he discovered the Wazīr's intentions (by the following train of reasoning):—

'His Highness, the Minister of the Age, was no enemy, nor was he by any means unacquainted with the canons of poesy. Probably he noted something incorrect in my verses, and they sounded harsh to His Munificence. His usual habit is to give praise and to show liberality and (on others) he bestows golden sequins and silver coins as rewards. Why did he give me such a drubbing last night? Surely it was not without a cause that I was thus disgraced. It is evident that I must continue my studies, and that I must go and sit at the feet of some illustrious scholar. I must hold frequent

² He was admitted inside the house. It will be seen that on his next visit he had to stand in the courtyard. The audience-hall occupied one side of the courtyard, being separated from it by a row of arches, not by a wall.

intercourse with my master, and perhaps through his instruction I may attain to a certain eminence in elocution, and to some sort of perfection in the Muses' art.'

So rising he repaired to the learned Jāmī,¹ and studied a little with that famous author. When he had arrived at some sort of eminence in the poetic art, and his master began to express his approval, he returned one day to the gate of the minister. The gate porters approached His Highness with the intelligence,—'Your Majesty,' said they, 'he who was drubbed the other day, is now again at the door, and prays for admission.' He made a sign of consent, 'let no one stop his entrance. As he is determined to succeed, let him enter.'² He came before His Highness, who lowered his eyes (and affected to be engaged on some business). The poor poet remained standing (outside in front of the audience-hall), scorched in the sun for at least three hours. At length the Wazir raised his eyebrows and merely said 'well?' and then the unfortunate man had to recite his panegyric from where he was standing in the courtyard.³ Without being called up, when he had concluded, he was simply given a present and told to go.

One of the Wazir's boon companions took courage, and said, 'At the former interview, Your Highness paid him so much honour, and then gave him the severest possible cudgelling. Now Your Highness has given him a large reward, but has got rid of him without further ceremony straight off from where he was. I understand not. What was that? and what was this?' In answer the Elect One deigned to reply, 'Is such mockery of the time-honoured (rules of poetry) to be allowed to exist? When you have (a mocker) in your power, destroy him pitilessly. Such correction was necessary for him, that the news of it might reach near and far, and that he who hears may refrain from self-conceit and seek teachers from whom he may receive instruction. Otherwise every lout would be uttering his nonsensical talk, and by degrees the art of poesy would fall into disrepute. When I drubbed this Hilālī he was raw (and untaught), but when he came this time he was worthy of reward.'

Not to make too long a story,—there were men of discernment at that period,—here, too, there arises a sense of shame at (my detractors), those worms of the dunghill. From this want of discernment a deterioration in poetry is becoming prevalent, and, at whomsoever you look, you see nothing but self-ostentation and self-conceit. There is neither the skill for telling a story effectively, nor the command of language (to put it into choice words), and over and above this each (would-be poet) considers himself a Saḥbān of eloquence.⁴

Let not my pen run away with me,—now is not the time for feats of oratory. Silence,—for it is not the season for eloquence. Who nowadays listens to good advice? Who has sufficient intelligence to understand (my) words? The whole world is filled with people of no discernment and where, also, have I patience⁵ to bear (their) rejoinders?

¹ Jāmī (1414-1492), the author of the Yusuf o Zulaikha, was one of the most famous of Persian poets.

² There was no ushering in in state. He was simply told to go in.

³ The courtyard, or ṣaḥn, would be inside the palace, but quite outside the audience-hall. The contrast is, of course, with the poet's former welcome, when he was invited into the hall and sat on the throne beside the Wazir. Now he is dismissed from the ṣaḥn itself (waḥī-ss), without being called up.

⁴ Those who have read the Gulistān, will not require to be reminded of Saḥbān Wail (died 673 A.D.), the most celebrated preacher of the early days of Islām. It is said that he used to speak for a whole year before an assembly without once repeating a single phrase.

⁵ 'Patience' is not one of the dictionary meanings of dimāgh, but bī-dimāgh means 'impatience.' Some such meaning as 'patience' is the only possible one here. We might use the English metaphor of 'stomach.' 'I have no stomach to bear my opponents' criticisms.'

MODERN URDŪ POETRY.

As a further specimen of Urdū poetry, I give a set of verses by Shamsu'l 'ulamā Maulavī Saiyid Altāf Husain Ansārī Pānipatī, commonly known as Hālī, who is another member of the new school of Delhi authors, to which Nazir Aḥmad also belongs. Hālī has as great a reputation for his verse as that writer has for his prose. The school aims at abandoning the false hyperbole which is so common a feature in oriental verse, and at depicting thoughts in natural colours. In the poem here quoted, Hālī addresses his Muse, and encourages her to adhere to simplicity of diction and to truth. As will be seen, his style, though full of Persian words, combines simplicity with great elegance of thought and expression. The text is taken, with Mr. G. E. Ward's kind permission, from his edition of the Quatrains of Hālī.

Regarding the system of transliteration here adopted for Urdū poetry, and the method of scansion, see p. 147. Note specially that in words like firēfta (verse 2) or rāstī (verse 3), the syllable containing a long vowel followed by a silent consonant is scanned as a trochee (— ◡). Thus, firēfta is scanned ◡ — ◡ ◡ and rāstī is scanned — ◡ — .

1. My Muse! if thou be not heart-beguiling, it is no sorrow; but pity on thee if thou be not heart-melting, thou.

2. Though the whole world be spell-bound in allegiance to artifice, Courage! from thine own simplicity turn not back, thou.

3. If there is in thine own nature the precious gem of sincerity, independent of applause from the present age art thou.

4. If thou canst not make the world turn to look at thy beauty, look at thyself; and take a pride in thine own self, thou.

¹ The translation is by Mr. G. E. Ward, to whose kindness I am also indebted for the text. The notes are mine.

5. The deep sea of reality, thou hast made heave its waves; thou shalt sink the ship of imposture, and still survive, thou.

6. Those days are past when lies were the creed of verse-making; now should the *Qibla*¹ shift that way, do not worship thither, thou.

7. If to live within the eyes of men of insight is precious,² with those void of vision hold no compromises, thou.

8. Should men turn up their noses at thy new-fangled medicine, hold them excused;—if so be thou art a wise physician, thou.

9. In stillness, with thy truth, build up a home in peoples' hearts; exalt not the banner of refinement yet, thou.

10. Disguised as a thief point out the road to the benighted; if thou wish for the long life of Elijah,³ thou.

11. Honour's secret lies hidden in the service of one's country. Think thyself to be Maḥmūd, if thou art Ayāz,⁴ thou.

12. O Muse! since thou hast cast thyself upon the straight path, begin not now to look upon its ups and downs, thou.

13. If a new world is to be conquered, do thou go forth, and take, clear of the hugging rafts, thine own ship, thou.

14. Value for truth does come;—but after disparagements. If there be an instance to the contrary, think it rare, thou.

15. Should any recognise thy merit, count him one more gained. Ḥālī has pride in thee; have a pride in him, thou.

¹ The Qibla is the temple of the Ka'ba at Mecca, towards which Muslims turn their faces when at prayer.

² Mr. Ward suggests, as an alternative rendering, 'If (thou wish) to live honoured in the eyes of men of insight.'

³ Khwāja Khizr, or the Green Prophet, so named from the traditional colour of his apparel, is usually identified by Muslims with the prophet Elijah. He is said to have discovered and to have drunk of the Fountain of Life, and hence lives for ever.

⁴ Ayāz was a favourite slave of Sultān Maḥmūd of Ghaznī. He is the hero of many stories. His master's courtiers who were jealous of his influence, accused him to Maḥmūd, of purloining his jewels from the treasury. The next time he went there the Sultān followed him secretly. What was his surprise to see Ayāz draw from one of the chests a suit of old and dirty garments with which having clothed himself he prostrated himself on the ground and returned thanks to the Almighty for all the benefits conferred upon him. The Sultān went to him and demanded an explanation of his conduct. He replied, 'Most gracious Sire, when I first became your Majesty's servant, this was my dress, and, till that period, humble had been my lot. Now that, by the grace of God and your Majesty's favour, I am elevated above all the nobles of the land, and am entrusted with the treasures of the world, I am fearful that my heart should be puffed up by vanity; I therefore daily practise this act of humiliation to remind me of my former insignificance.' The Sultān being much pleased, added to his rank, and severely reprimanded his slanderers. See Beale's Oriental Biographical Dictionary, s.v. Ayāz. Maḥmūd himself was a mighty monarch, who invaded India no less than twelve times. He died A.D. 1030.

HIGH LITERARY HINDĪ OF BENARES.

The following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, by Bābū Śyām Sundar Dās, is in the high Sanskritised Hindī fashionable for literature written in Benares. Sanskrit words abound. In the very first sentence we have two,—manushya, a man, and putra, a son. Sanskrit spelling is also affected, as in amś for ans, a share; dēs for dēs, a country; dayā for dāyā, compassion.

किसी मनुष्यके दो पुत्र थे । उनमेंसे कुटुम्बके पितासे कहा है पिता सम्पत्तिमेंसे जो मेरा अंश होय सो मुझे दीजिये । तब उसने उनको अपनी सम्पत्ति बांट दिई । बहुत दिन नहीं बीते कि कुटुम्बका पुत्र सब कुछ एकट्ठा करके दूर देश चला गया और वहाँ लुचपनमें दिन बिताते हुए अपनी सम्पत्ति उड़ा दिई । जब वह सब कुछ उठा चुका तब उस देशमें बड़ा अकाल पड़ा और वह कंगाल हो गया । और वह जाके उस देशके निवासियोंमेंसे एकके यहां रहने लगा जिसने उसे अपने खेतोंमें सूअर चरानेको भेजा । और वह उन छीमियोंसे जिन्हें सूअर खाते थे अपना पेट भरने चाहता था और कोई नहीं उसको कुछ देता था । तब उसे चेत हुआ और उसने कहा मेरे पिताकी कितने मजूरोंको भोजनसे अधिक रोटी होती है और मैं भूखसे मरता हूँ । मैं उठके अपने पिता पास जाऊंगा और उससे कहूंगा हे पिता मैंने स्वर्गके विरुद्ध और आपके सामने पाप किया है । मैं फिर आपका पुत्र कहावनेके योग्य नहीं हूँ मुझे अपने मजूरोंमेंसे एकके समान कीजिये । तब वह उठके अपने पिता पास चला पर वह दूरही था कि उसकी पिताने उसे देखके दया किई और दौड़के उसके गलेमें लिपटके उसे चूमा । पुत्रने उससे कहा हे पिता मैंने स्वर्गके विरुद्ध और आपके सामने पाप किया है और फिर आपका पुत्र कहावनेके योग्य नहीं हूँ । परन्तु पिताने अपने दाँसोंसे कहा सबसे उत्तम बख्श निकालके उसे पहिनाओ और उसके हाथमें अंगूठी और पांवोंमें जूते पहिनाओ । और मोटा बख्खू लाके मारो और

हम खावें और आनन्द करें । क्योंकि यह मेरा पुत्र मूँचा था फिर जीआ है खो गया था फिर मिला है । तब वे आनन्द करने लगे ॥

HINDŌSTĀNĪ IN THE UNITED PROVINCES, THE PANJAB, CENTRAL PROVINCES, RAJPUTANA, AND CENTRAL INDIA.

The Hindōstānī spoken in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh requires no further illustrations. That of Lucknow has already been very fully dealt with. Over the rest of the provinces, where it is not a vernacular, Hindōstānī is largely used by the better classes of Musalmāns, by Native Christians, by educated Hindus as a lingua franca, and very generally in the large cities. The same remarks apply to the Panjab, to the Central Provinces, to Rajputana, and to Central India.

HINDŪSTĀNĪ IN EASTERN INDIA.

Hindŏstānī is also spoken in Assam, Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa. In Assam it is spoken only by immigrants. In Bihar it is used much as in the United Provinces, but to a less extent, a large number of middle class Musalmāns speaking Awadhī instead, so that we find three languages in use in the territory,—Bihārī by the mass of the population, Awadhī by middle class Musalmāns of the country parts, and Hindŏstānī in the great towns and among the upper class Musalmāns. As we go East in Bihar the employment of Awadhī disappears.¹

In Bengal proper most of the Musalmāns speak Bengali more or less mixed with Persian and Arabic words. The upper class Musalmāns (who often have marriage connexions with Upper India), however, speak Urdū, and often very good Urdū. In Western Bengal, Hindŏstānī is more widely spread, and in Birbhum it is largely spoken by all Muslims. Hindŏstānī, in fact, is so much the language of the Musalmāns of Western Bengal and Orissa that when a family is converted to Islām it changes its language also. For instance, the Garpādā Bhuiyā family of Balasore were formerly Hindūs, but since they became Muslim they have abandoned their native Ōriyā for the Hindŏstānī of their co-religionists.

The Musalmāns of Orissa, though they form an exceedingly small fraction of the population, have preserved a fairly pure though not very grammatical Urdū, as the language of their home life.

The upper class Musalmāns of Bengal employ the Persian character for writing their Hindŏstānī. The lower classes, when literate, usually employ the Bengali or the Nāgarī character. In Eastern Bengal, especially, the Nāgarī is quite common among Muslims. As an example of Bengali Hindŏstānī I give a short extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which illustrates the language of the Muhammadan population of Birbhum. It was received in the Nāgarī character. The only thing to be remarked in it is the spelling. The influence of the Bengali round them makes them pronounce a short a, when written, like the ō in 'hot.' Hence when they wish to write Hindŏstānī in the Bengali or the Nāgarī character, they do not represent the Hindŏstānī short a (pronounced like the u in 'nut') by a, but, for want of some better expedient, write it ā. Thus they spell ham, I, hām. Sometimes this Hindŏstānī a is represented by e, as in leṛkā, a son. If they wrote ham, they would pronounce it hōm. In other respects, it will be seen that the Birbhum Hindŏstānī, or (as it is locally called) Musalmānī, is far from correct. Gender and number are altogether neglected. In transliterating, when a short a is written in the original, I represent it by ō. This only occurs in words borrowed from Bengali, such as bisōy, property, which is meant for বিসয়. Another example of the influence of Bengali is the employment of giyā, instead of gayā, to mean 'he went.' As, we shall see, is also the case in Madras, the use of the agent case with nē is unknown.

The Hindōstānī of Orissa is not written in the Persian character. The few literate Musalmāns write it in the Oṛiyā character. As an example, I give an extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son. As in Birbhum Musalmānī it is most ungrammatical. The agent case with nē is not used, and no attention is paid to gender or number. We may also note the Oṛiyā (and also Dakhīnī Hindōstānī) form ku, employed instead of the accusative-dative suffix kō.

HINDŌSTĀNĪ OF GUJARAT.

The Hindōstānī spoken by the Musalmāns of Gujarat is, on the whole, very fairly pure,—much better than that of Bengal or Orissa. It is naturally influenced somewhat by the Gujarātī spoken by the surrounding Hindūs. This influence is shown principally in the vocabulary. As a rule the vocabulary is remarkably free from Arabic and Persian words, and, when those occur, they are often curiously distorted. On the other hand a few Gujarātī words, especially the very common nē or anē, and, have been adopted. The grammar is, as a rule, correct. The character employed for writing is sometimes the Persian, and sometimes the Gujarātī. I shall give examples in both modes of script.

The first example is in the Persian character. It was sent by the Collector of Customs, Bombay, as a specimen of the ‘Gujarātī dialect of Urdū spoken by Musalmāns of north, central, and south Gujarat.’ The following peculiarities may be noted.

The word for ‘one’ is ek, not ēk. The Arabic word fuzūl has become phaḍūl, and safar has become saphr. There is a Dakhinī form apas, used as an oblique form in apas-kē, of one self. In standard Urdū āpas (with a long initial ā) is only used in the plural.

Gujarātī forms are nē, and ; bhēgnā, to collect ; pāḍ-dēnā, to make completely.

Some forms common in local dialects of Hindostān, which have disappeared in standard Urdū, have survived in Gujarat. Such are unō-mē, among them ; kayā (for kahyā), it was said ; and saphrō, on a journey.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING

A certain man wrote an application addressed to a king. In it he wrote a deal of nonsense, and he was called on for an explanation. By the grace of God the king, who was a just monarch, found him not guilty of having committed his fault intentionally, and he was pardoned. Then his father wrote a letter to him saying, 'O my dear son, everyone should do everything with open eyes, and after mature consideration, so that he may not fall into any blunder through his carelessness, and thereby sup sorrow. There is a fable to this effect.--A man once complained to a doctor that he had a pain in his belly. The doctor asked him what he had been eating that day. "Only a bit of burnt bread," said he. The story goes that the doctor gave him for medicine some eye-ointment, "for," said he, "it is important first of all to apply remedies to your eyes. If they had been sound, you would not have eaten a bit of burnt bread." The moral of this is that in dealing with Government, you should show intelligence and watchfulness, and avoid every kind of carelessness.'

The next specimen is an extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and comes from the Mahikantha Political Agency. It is written in the Gujarātī character. It will be noticed that in general style it resembles the specimen received from Bombay. It is not highly Persianised, and possesses a few Gujarātī idioms. As elsewhere in Gujarat the diphthong au becomes ō, as in ōr, and ; dōlat, wealth. There is considerable laxity in employing the numbers of the pronouns, e.g., us-mē-kē for un-mē-kē. The vowel ō sometimes becomes u, as it does dialectically in Upper India. Thus the sign of the dative-accusative is kũ, not kō, and the oblique plural of nouns ends in ũ, not ō. The oblique singular of the first personal pronoun is muj, not mujh, which is also an Upper India dialectic form. Gujarātī words are sometimes employed. Such are chhēlē, far, and bhēgnā, to collect.

HINDŌSTĀNĪ OF CUTCH.

The Hindōstānī spoken in Cutch is more corrupt than the foregoing specimens. It is full of Gujarātī, and has also local peculiarities of its own. As a specimen I give a short folk-tale. It is not worth while to give a complete account of the irregularities, but the following are the main points worthy of notice. Some of the forms given below are interesting survivals of an archaic dialect which has elsewhere been levelled down to the general standard of Hindōstānī. Such, especially, is the use of hũ for the nominative case of the first personal pronoun, while mē is reserved for the case of the agent. In standard Hindōstānī hũ has passed out of use, and maĩ is employed for the nominative, although it is by origin an instrumental.

There is the usual Gujarat change of ai to ē in ēsā, such; hē, is; and mē, by me.

Verbs are often contracted when the root ends in h. This is also found in the dialects of Upper India. Examples are raiṃā, they (fem.) remained; kayā, it was said; kētā-hē, he says.

Feminine nouns have a nominative plural in ā, as ākhā, eyes; chijā, things. Adjectives agreeing with feminine nouns in the plural, also end in ā, as raiṃā, they (fem.) remained; sājiā, sound, in good health (agreeing with ākhā). We sometimes find neuter adjectives, as in dēṇā (masc.), dēṇī (fem.), dēṇā (neuter), to be given.

The oblique plural ends in ū, so also kū is used for kō. Thus, vaidh-kū, to the doctor; ākhū-mā, in the eyes.

In the pronouns, hũ is 'I,' with an agent mērē or maĩ. Tijē is 'to thee.' The Gujarātī pōtũ is used for 'self.'

The word for 'and' is the Gujarātī anē.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

An old woman having lost the use of her eyes, called in a physician to heal them, and made this bargain with him in the presence of witnesses, that if he should cure her blindness, he should receive from her a sum of money; but if her infirmity remained, she should give him nothing. This agreement being entered into, the physician time after time applied his salve to her eyes, and, on every visit taking something away, stole by little and little all her property. When he had got all she had, he healed her, and demanded the promised payment. The old woman when she recovered her sight and saw none of her goods in the house, would give him nothing. The physician insisted on his claim, and, as she still refused, summoned her before the judge. The old woman thus spoke in the court: 'This man here speaks the truth in what he says; for I did promise to give him a sum of money, if I should recover my sight; but if I continued blind, I was to give him nothing. Now he declares that I am healed. I, on the contrary, affirm that I am still blind; for when I lost the use of my eyes, I saw in my house various chattels and valuable goods; but now, though he swears I am cured of my blindness, I am not able to see a single thing in it.'

DAKHINĪ OF BOMBAY.

The following specimen of the Dakhinī of the Bombay Presidency is the first half of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, prepared in the office of the Collector of Customs of Bombay. It is said to illustrate the dialect of the 'Musalmāns of the Deccan.'

As pointed out above (vide pp. 58 and 62), the Dakhinī of Bombay has not abandoned the use of the case of the Agent before the past tenses of transitive verbs,—indeed, in the present example it goes even further than the standard form of Hindōstānī in this respect. For instance, the verb bōlnā, to speak, is throughout treated as a transitive verb, whereas in the standard dialect it is always intransitive. Moreover, the Agent case is sometimes used with the past tense of an intransitive verb, as also occurs in some of the Western Hindī dialects of Upper India. Thus, chhōkrē-nē gayā, the boy went, literally, 'by the boy it was gone.' There are some cases of the influence of Marāthī. For instance, āpan is used not only in its proper sense of 'own,' but also to mean 'we' including the person addressed. Again the forms mājē and majhē, to me, are both due to the same influence. In mai mērē bāp-kadan jāū, I will go to my father, we have mērē used where in the standard we should have apnē. This looks like the influence of Gujarātī. Anē or nē for 'and' is also Gujarātī. Bhī is also used at the beginning of a sentence to mean 'and,' which is quite irregular. Haur for 'and' is common in dialects of Western Hindī and of Rājasthānī.

Typical of Dakhinī are the use of jidhar to mean 'when' and 'where' instead of 'whither'; wū for woh, he; kōi-nē for kisī-nē; and athā for thā, he was. Attention may be drawn to the frequency with which Arabic and Persian words are incorrectly spelt.

became; he lost was, he was-got.' So they merriment to-make began.

The following specimen of ¹⁹⁸Bombay Dakhinī comes from the district of North Kanara. It will be found to agree very closely with the grām̐matical sketch given on pp. 59 and ff., although it departs much more widely from Standard Urdū than does the specimen which came from Bombay Town. It will be seen that the Agent case with nē is regularly employed, but that the Madras custom is followed of making the verb agree in gender, number, and person with the subject instead of the object, in spite of the presence of the nē. The Agent case is used even with intransitive verbs. Examples are mañ-nē lāyā-ũ, I have brought; bhaṭ-nē dō hanḍiyā lāyā, the Bhaṭ brought two pots; lōkā-ne khānā dēnē lagē, the people began to give food.

Among peculiarities of pronunciation, we may note a local tendency to convert s to sh. Thus, ushē for usē, to him; paishē, pice; shikāyā, he taught. In the latter case there is also a dropping of the aspiration of kh. The correct Urdū form would be sikhāyā. With this loss of aspiration we may compare the dropping of the initial h of the auxiliary verb in phrases like lāyā-ũ, I have brought, for lāyā-hũ, and lētā-ē, you are taking, miltā-ē, it is got. Words borrowed from Arabic are sometimes altered, q being changed to kh, as in shaukhī, for shauqī, devoted to; wakhat, for waqt, time. There is a tendency to shorten long vowels when they fall in unaccented syllables, as in lejā-kō, for lējā-kar, having taken away, and bazār for bāzār, a market. So also sarkā for sarikhā, like. In dālnā, to place, a cerebral ḍ has been dentalised. All these latter are regular Dakhinī peculiarities.

Other Dakhinī forms which are prominent are athā meaning 'was' and the regular use of the plural for the singular. Thus, un is over and over again used for us, and hē, they are, for hai, he is. The verb bōlnā is regularly treated as transitive, as in bhaṭ-nē bōlyā, the Bhaṭ said. Verbs of speaking and asking put the person addressed in the accusative and not in the ablative; thus, bhaṭ-kō pūchhyā, he asked the Bhaṭ. Note the curious way in which the words bōl-kō bōlyā, having said he said, are appended, like the Sanskrit iti, to every statement made by any of the characters of the story.

A few instances of borrowing from Marāṭhī occur. Such are the emphatic ch in waisā-ch, even in that way, and the word rāwā, a parrot.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a certain village there was a Bhaṭ¹ who was a great gambler. By it he lost all his property, and so he went out to beg. His caste-fellows said to each other that if he went on begging he would some day lose his caste, and so they gave him every day a seer of cooked rice. Each day he used to go and fetch his dinner home. One day a cultivator brought a wild parrot for sale to the village, but it was too old for any one to buy it, as there was no likelihood of its learning to speak. As he was going home with the bird he met the Bhaṭ returning with his dinner. The cultivator asked him if he would buy the bird. 'That I will,' said the Bhaṭ, 'but I have no money. All that I have is this food, and if you like you can take half of it as the price.' The cultivator was hungry, and so he made a bargain on these terms. The Bhaṭ took the parrot home and after giving him a little of his half-share of the food ate the rest. Shortly afterwards the parrot began to speak to him, at which the Bhaṭ was much pleased, and asked him what he was saying. The parrot said, 'O Bhaṭ, how much dinner do you get each day?' 'I get one seer.' Said the parrot, 'tell those people to give you uncooked rice.' The Bhaṭ did so, and his people agreed, and gave him a seer of uncooked rice, some wood, and some split peas. One day he took all these and brought them to the parrot saying, 'I have brought uncooked rice as you told me.' The parrot said, 'sell half the rice in the bāzār, and you will get five pice for it. With these buy two earthen pots, a big and a small one.' He did so and showed the pots to the parrot. 'Now,' said the parrot, 'cook the rice in the big pot, and the split peas in the small one.' So the Bhaṭ cooked his dinner.

(Here the story ends abruptly. The remaining adventures of the parrot and the Bhaṭ are unknown to me.)

¹ Bhaṭs are a sept of Brāhmins. Many of them live by begging.

The next specimen of Dakhinī comes from the State of Savantvadi, which lies just north of Goa. It is a folktale. The language closely resembles the Dakhinī of Madras, the most important exception being the use of the word hatā to mean 'was'. This word is used in Gujarat, Braj and Bundelkhand in the same meaning, and a possible explanation of its presence here may be that it is a survival from the tenth century, when Ratnagiri and the neighbouring country was ruled by Yādavas. Braj is the head-quarters of that tribe.

The principal peculiarities of this form of Dakhinī are as follows :—

Arabic words are deformed in the borrowing. Such are garīb for gharīb, and khātar for khāṭir. We may also note as an irregular pronunciation mūgnī, instead of māgnā, to demand. Hōr, and, is a dialectic form in Upper India. Āchhnā means 'to be.'

The sign of the Agent case is nī. For the dative we have kē-nī, as in us-kē-nī, to him. This shows the origin of the common Dakhinī form kanē.

As already stated, the word for 'was' is hatā. We have also tā in lagyā-tā, had happened. Tā is also a Bundelī form. The present tense of the auxiliary verb loses its aspiration in composition, as in ātā-ō, I am coming; nhāṭt-ē, thou art running.

The case of the Agent is used in the Madras fashion, i.e. the verb agrees in number and gender with the noun in the Agent case and not with the object. I therefore ignore the suffix of the Agent in the interlinear translation, and treat it as non-existent. The case is even used before intransitive verbs. Examples of the way in which it is employed are,—un-nī bōlyā, he said; un-nī bōlī, she said; kinī milēlē māl-kī chārī karyā, someone made tale-bearing of (about) the treasure trove; un-nī munḍī halāyā, he shook his head; un-nī dil-mē lāyā, he brought into his mind, he thought.

The Gujarātī past participle in ēlā is common. Thus, bharēlā taplā, a filled vessel; milēlā māl, treasure trove; diēlā taplā, the vessel given (by the uncle).

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was once a poor old woman who earned her living by spinning thread. She had one son. One day she gave him two balls of thread to take away and sell. As he went along he met a lizard sitting on the top of a hedge, who shook its head in terror at the sight of a man. The boy said, 'Nunkey, if these are for you, you can take them.' So he put the balls on the hedge and went home. His mother asked him for the money resulting from the sale, and he told her that his uncle had asked for them, and that he had given them to him. So she spun some more thread and went off herself to market to sell it, and with the money she got for it bought some half-boiled rice and returned home. A few days afterwards the boy said to his mother, 'I am going off to get the money from Nunkey.' She thought he was talking of his real uncle and said, 'very well.' So he started on his way. On the top of the hedge there was sitting a big lizard, which ran away in terror as soon as it saw him. Said the boy, 'Nunkey, where are you running to? Give me the pice which you owe me for the thread I gave you that day, or else I'll catch you by the tail and dash you to the ground.' He then ran after the lizard. There was a vessel full of rupees in the jungle hard by and over this glided the lizard. The boy thought it was his uncle's property, so he lifted up the filled plate and carried it home. On the way it occurred to him that the rupees might be hollow, so he poured them all from off his head on to the ground. Two of them remained on his head, and these he considered to be solid, but the rest he neglected as being hollow. So he took the two rupees and brought them home to his mother saying, 'two of those which were in the vessel given by Nunkey were solid. The rest were all hollow.' The mother told him to show the others to her, and went and picked them all up and brought them home. Then she bought some wheat and jaggery which she made into balls and fried in ghee. These she scattered over the courtyard and said to her son, 'it has been raining toffee-balls. Go out and pick them up and bring them home to eat.' So he picked them up and sat down to eat them.

DAKHINĪ OF MADRAS.

The operations of the Linguistic Survey do not extend to the Presidency of Madras, or to the neighbouring States of Hyderabad and Mysore. I am hence unable to offer any specimens prepared for the Survey in these countries. In order, however, to make the subject complete I give, as an example of the Dakhinī of Madras, the following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, as issued by the Madras Auxiliary Bible Society. It will be seen that the language is that illustrated in the preceding grammatical sketch. The case of the agent nowhere occurs, and verbs of saying and asking govern an accusative and not an ablative of the person addressed. Note how, under the influence of the neighbouring Dravidian languages, the use of the relative pronoun is avoided as much as possible. I give a transliteration. An interlinear translation is unnecessary.

کسی آدمی کے دو بیٹے تھے - اور اُن میں سے چھوٹا باپ کو کہا اے
 باپ مجھے پہنچتا ہے سو مال کا حصہ مجھے دے اور وہ اپنی زندگانی اُن کو

 ایک دورے ملک کا سفر کیا اور وہاں اپنا مال بدمعاشی میں اڑایا - اور
 سب خرچ کر چکا سو وقت اُس ملک میں بڑا قحط پڑا - اور وہ محتاج ہونے

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.¹

They have related that a washerman was engaged in his business on the bank of some river, and every day observed a crane which was seated on the side of the stream, and which picking up the worms from within the mud used to eat them, patiently remaining silent. Then flying thence it used to go to his own nest. One day a hawk came forth suddenly, and having struck as his prey a fine partridge, ate a little, and leaving the rest went away. On seeing this the crane took to thinking within himself, that 'this bird, being so small, hunts and kills such very large creatures; I, being so large, am in the habit of eating such filthy food: this is the effect of my want of fortune and meanness of origin. What! cannot I, too, rouse such greatness! From this time I will not eat such worms, and will for once strike my wing up to heaven.

VERSE.

"When the columns of smoke ascend above the clouds,

"Why should they return with the showers?

"They who are lively of heart will mount up to the firmament,

"By the impulse of their heart alone they will fly hence above." "

Having taken this fancy into his head he left off eating worms, and began to lie in wait for a partridge or pigeon. The washerman had witnessed the exhibition of the hawk, and that the crane, having abandoned eating worms, was looking eagerly towards a pigeon; at beholding which he was struck with surprise, and began to direct his attention to the spectacle. All at once the pigeon came there, and the crane taking wing was intent upon it. The pigeon directing her flight towards the water, and eluding the other, fled away from before him, but the crane, having made a swoop at her, fell slap on the shore of the water, and his wings became entangled in the mire. The washerman then came and seized him, and proceeded towards home. On the way a friend meeting him asked, 'what is this?' The washerman replied, 'this is a crane that was himself caught whilst attempting to do the deed of a hawk.'

DAKHINĪ OF BERAR.

The Dakhinī of Berar in no way differs from that spoken in Madras, and specimens of it are not necessary. The same remark applies to the Dakhinī spoken in those districts of the Central Provinces which lie south of the Satpuras, and adjoin Berar and Hyderabad. Although, of course, no definite line can be drawn, we may take the Satpura range, and the connected hills, as the boundary between standard Hindōstānī and the Dakhinī variety.

VERNACULAR HINDŌSTĀNĪ.

The following account of the peculiarities of the Vernacular Hindōstānī of the Upper Doab and Western Rohilkhand is based on the specimens annexed. It will be noticed that many of them have been found to exist in the Hindōstānī of Gujarat and in Dakhinī.

PRONUNCIATION.—Vowels.—There is a strong tendency to prefer the letter ē to ai, and ō to au, thus, we have pēr, not pair, feet; hē, not hai, he is; hē, not hai, they are; ōr, not aur, and; lōndā, not laundā, a son; dōr, not daur, run. Ōr, and, is sometimes weakened to ar, and is then sometimes aspirated and becomes har. In Sahāranpur and Dehra Dun it becomes hōr. Similarly, baith, sit, becomes baṭṭh, which, in the second Meerut specimen, becomes baṭṭ. In other respects vowels are frequently interchanged. Thus we have both kahā and kehā, said, and kuhānā, to be called. The letter i, in an unaccented syllable, has become a in sakārī, a hunter; maṭhāi, sweet-meats. In kaṭṭhā, for ikaṭṭhā, in one place, an initial unaccented i has been elided. In ak, for ki, that, i has become a, and the vowel has been transposed. In yād'mī, a man, the vowel y has been prefixed.

Consonants.—The influence of Pañjābī is evidenced by the strong preference shown for cerebral letters. The dental न na, when medial or final, often becomes the cerebral ण ṇa, and the dental ल la, when medial or final, often becomes the cerebral ऌ ḷa. The latter letter is unknown to standard Hindī, and to the more eastern dialects, but is common in Rājasthānī, Pañjābī, and Gujarātī. In the manuscripts received from the Upper Doab it is indicated by putting a dot under ल, thus, ल, but in printing the specimens I have followed the usual custom of writing ऌ. Examples of the employment of cerebral ण ṇa are māṇas, a man, for mānus; ap'ṇā, own, for ap'nā; khōwaṇ, to lose, for khōnā; suṇaṇ, to hear, for sun'nā. In likar, for nikal, come out, initial n has become a dental l, and l has become a cerebral ṛ. Examples of ḷ are jaṇgaḷ, a forest; kōḷī, the breast; baḷad, a bullock; bāl, hair. If the spelling of the specimens is to be trusted, the change of l to ḷ is not nearly so regular as that of n to ṇ. We often find dental l where we should expect the cerebral letter. Thus we have milē-gī, not miḷē-gī, she (i.e. it) will be got; chalā, not chaḷā, he went. Perhaps, however, this is due to carelessness in writing.

In standard Hindī and to the east, a medial द ḍa or ढ ḍha is regularly pronounced ra or rha. Thus, बड़ा barā, not बड़ा baḍā, great. In the Upper Doab, the ḍa-sound is often preserved. Thus, गढ़ी or गढ़ी (see below), not gārī, a cart; baḍā, not barā, great; chadh'nā, not chār'h'nā, to mount. I have, however, noted a few instances of r such as ghōrā, a horse; chir'yā, a bird; but these may be slips of the pen on the part of the writer. The preference is certainly for the ḍa (or ḍha) sound.

One of the most marked tendencies of this dialect is to double a consonant after an accented long vowel. In this case the preceding long vowel is usually shortened, i.e. ī becomes i, ū becomes u, ē becomes e, and ō becomes o. The only apparent exception is ā, which in writing remains long. It is, however, in such cases pronounced short, not like the u in 'nut', but like a in the German word 'mann'. Thus the sound of the word bāppū, a father, might be represented in English (not Hunterian) spelling by bappoo. So strong is this tendency to double consonants that even the t of the termination of the present participle is doubled after a long vowel. Examples of this doubling are bāppū, a father; bāssanh, a vessel; gāddā, a cart; pāttā, obtaining (present participle of pānā); jāttā, going; bhukkhā, hungry; beṭṭā, a son; khettō-mē, in the fields; dekkhā, seen; bhejjā, sent; roṭṭī, bread; chhoṭṭā, small; loggō-pē, on people; hottā, becoming.

DECLENSION.—Nouns.—There is an oblique form singular of weak nouns which ends in ō or ū. Thus, gharō-mē, into the house; gharū par rahā, he stayed at home; gharō, to the house. The oblique plural sometimes ends in ū, as in marādū-kā, of men; beṭyū-kā, of daughters; chokkhē yādmyū-kā, of good men. In one case, chholā-kā-nē, husks (Muzaffarnagar), we have an oblique plural in ā (as in Dakhinī). The nominative plural of feminine nouns in i ends in ī, as in beṭṭī, daughters.

The sign of the case of the agent is nē or nē. For the accusative-dative, we have kē, kū or kō, nū (a Pañjābī form), and nē. Examples are bāp-kē, (a son has been born) to (my) father; Bīrbal-kū, to Bīrbal; bāppū-nū, to a father; chholā-kā-nē sūr khā-hē, the swine are eating husks; bandar-nē us-nē dēkh-liyā, the monkey saw it; maṭhāi-nē chhōr-dē, (that) he should give up the sweetmeats. For the locative we have pē and pa, on; and for the ablative settī. In beṭṭē-nē chalā-giyā, the son went away (Muzaffarnagar), we have the agent case used with a neuter verb.

Pronouns.—The pronouns of the first and second persons are somewhat irregular. Their principal forms are as follows:—

| | I. | Thou. |
|------------|----------------------|-----------------------|
| Sing. Nom. | mē | tū |
| Agent | mē | tē |
| Oblique | majh, mujh | tajh, tujh |
| Acc.-Dat. | majhē, mujhē | tajhē, tujhē |
| Genitive | mērā | tērā |
| Plur. Nom. | ham | tam |
| Agent | ham-nē | tam-nē |
| Oblique | ham | tam |
| Acc.-Dat. | hamē | tamē |
| Genitive | hamārā, mhārā | tumhārā, thārā |

Note that in the singular these pronouns do not take nē in the case of the agent. Thus, mē (not mē-nē) bhēj-diyā-thā, I sent; tē yā chij kis-kē-tē lai? from whose (house) did you take (i.e. buy) this thing?

The demonstrative pronouns have a feminine form in the nominative. They are as follows:—

| | Nom. Masc. | Nom. Fem. |
|--------------------|-----------------|-----------|
| This, | yū, yah | yā |
| That, he, she, it, | o, ō, oh | oā |

In other respects they are as in standard Hindī, except that the Nominative Plural of ō is oē.

Other pronominal forms are apnā, own; jō, jōn, who; kōn or kē, who?; kē, what? (both substantive and adjective); kai, how many?; kō, any one (obl. kisī); jōn-sā, jō-kuchh, whatever; asā, such; ib, now; ibhi, ib-jā, even now; jib is both 'when' and

'then' as elsewhere in Western Hindī dialects; jib-jā, thereon; whā, whā-sī, there; jā, where.

CONJUGATION.—Verb substantive.—The present is—

| Sing. | Plur. |
|--------------|-----------|
| 1. hū | hē |
| 2. hē | hō |
| 3. hē | hē |

The past is thā, etc., as in the literary form of the dialect.

Active Verb.—The tense which in standard Hindī is mainly used as a present subjunctive, here often retains its original meaning of a present indicative. Thus, mē mārū, I strike, or may strike.

The Present Definite is formed by conjugating this simple present (not the present participle) with the present tense of the verb substantive. Thus,—

| Sing | Plur |
|-----------------------------------|----------------|
| 1. mārū-hū , I am striking | mārē-hē |
| 2. mārē-hē | mārō-hō |
| 3. mārē-hē | mārē-hē |

Sometimes the present participle is used as in the literary dialect. Thus, hottā-hē, he is becoming; jāttē-hē, they are going.

The Imperfect is sometimes formed on the same principle as those on which the present definite is formed, substituting the past, for the present, tense of the verb substantive. Thus, mē mārū-thā, or mē mār-tā thā, I was striking. More usually, this tense is formed as in Rājasthānī and sometimes in Braj Bhākhā, by conjugating an oblique verbal noun in ē, with the past tense of the verb substantive. This form also occurs in the Magahī dialect of Bihārī. Thus, mārē-thā, I, thou, or he was striking, literally, was on striking; mārē-thē, we, you, they were striking. Compare the Old English 'was a-striking.'

Verbs whose roots end in a long vowel are contracted in the present and future. Thus, khā-hē, for khāē-hē, they eat; jāūgā, for jāūgā, I shall go; khāgā, for khāēgā, he will eat; khāgē, we shall eat.

The Infinitive ends in nā (oblique nē), or n (oblique the same). Thus, khānā, to eat, dative khānē-kō, for eating; khōwan, to lose (note the inserted o after ō); paraṇ, to fall; bharan-kō, for filling.

The verb karⁿnā makes its past participle karā or kiyā. Thus, karā-hē, or kiyā-hē, (I) have done (sin); Jānā, to go, has both gayā and the Pañjābī giyā. Dharūnā, to place, has its past tense irregularly dharyāyā.

In one place the word for 'it is proper' is given as chahāiyē. In maṭhāi kadⁿnī chāhī, he wished to take out the sweetmeats [literally, the sweetmeat-to-be-taken-out (a gerundial adjective) was desired], we have an instructive illustration of the use of a desiderative verb.

In the second specimen from Meerut, we have an irregular conjunctive participle in ū which is borrowed from Rājasthānī. It is baṭṭū (for baṭṭhū), having sat.

We have an example of a potential passive in kuhānā, to be able to be called.

The usual negative is nahī, not. Nē and nī are also used. Nī appears to be used with the first person as in mē nī chālā, I did not go, and nē with the third person as in usē kō nē dētā, no one used to give to him.

The first specimens of Vernacular Hindōstānī come from the District of Meerut.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Why, thrust here and there, dost thou, O horse, wander about in illusion? That which is written in thy fate will come equally certainly to thee, though thou sit at home.

Why dost thou tie up thy matted hair, why dost thou bind the topknot (of a faqīr)? In this world have hundreds of shaveling ascetics shaved their heads and died. Why holdest thou under thine arm the ascetic's gourd and mace and cup? Why wrappest thou (an insect-strainer of) fine cloth before thy mouth, and becomest thou a Jain? If the heart be not clean then art thou worthless. That which is written in thy fate will come equally certain to thee, though thou sit at home.

Why dost thou cover thy body with ashes, and why dost thou wear the ascetic's deer-skin? Why dost thou wander about with a wooden rosary around thy neck? Why dost thou torture thyself, and burn thy body black in the fire? There is but one and one only path for finding the Lord. O one-eyed Vain One, tear the veil of ignorance from off thy face. That which is written in thy fate will come equally certain to thee, though thou sit at home.

Why with loud cries dost thou endeavour to awaken the Invisible One? If He sleeps, then who is there who can awaken Him? When thou soundest thy tongs, to whom art thou addressing thy cries? It is the voice of each heart that He heareth, as is sung in the Vēdas themselves. O thou Vain One, Son of a Barren Woman, ask thou the manner of asking. That which is written in thy fate will come equally certain to thee, though thou sit at home.

What thou wouldst get, that wilt thou get if thou sit at home. Naught will come to thee from wandering through the forests. Who eateth the fruit of honest labour, his raft will the Invisible One guide over the ocean of existence. Saith Sis-Rām, 'to me hath fallen the (excellent) toy of knowledge. That which is written in my fate will come equally certain to me, though I sit at home.'

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

One day the Emperor Akbar told Birbal to bring him some bullock's milk, 'otherwise,' said he, 'I shall have you flayed alive.' Filled with anxiety as to how he was to comply with this order, Birbal went home and lay down on his bed. His daughter wondered at his condition, and asked him what was the matter. 'Nothing,' said he. She persisted in enquiring the secret cause of his evident trouble, and at length he said to her, 'the Emperor has ordered me to bring him some bullock's milk, "or else," says he, "I'll have you squeezed in an oil-press." I had no reply to make, and I have come home after having accepted the task.' Said she, 'Father, this is a matter of very slight importance. Don't worry about it.' So Birbal got up and went about his daily business.

Well, early next morning, what did this girl do but dress herself up in all her ornaments and fine apparel, and carry a lot of soiled clothes down to the bank of the Jamna, where it flowed below the Emperor's fort. The Emperor was taking a walk on the battlements and saw Birbal's daughter washing clothes in the river. 'My girl,' said he, 'why have you come out to wash clothes so early in the morning?' 'Your Majesty,' she replied, 'because my father was brought to bed of a son this morning.' This made the Emperor angry, and he cried, 'you impudent girl, well, upon my word, who ever heard of men having babies?' She answered, 'well, upon my word, your Majesty, who ever heard of bullocks giving milk?' The Emperor had no reply to make to this retort, so he simply told her to tell her father to come to court the first thing the next morning.

Early next morning Birbal appeared in court, and the Emperor asked him if he had brought the bullock's milk. He replied, 'your Majesty, peace be upon you, I sent it yesterday by my daughter's hand.' The Emperor had no reply to make to this.

¹ The procedure of this operation is to put the sufferer into an oil-press, and squeeze him out of his skin. Hence Birbal's reference to it later on. Birbal, as court-jester, should have made some witty retort, and thus got out of the difficulty. His ready tongue failed him on this occasion.

The language of the District of Muzaffarnagar is practically the same as that of Meerut. This will be evident from the following specimens, one of which is a portion of the Parable, while the other is a folk-tale.

WESTERN ROHILKHAND.

To the east of the Upper Doab, across the Ganges, lies Rohilkhand. The dialect of Eastern Rohilkhand is Braj Bhākhā and will be subsequently dealt with,—vide pp. 312 ff. Western Rohilkhand includes the State of Rāmpur and the two districts of Moradabad and Bijnaur. Here the dialect is Hindōstānī, and the Vernacular is much nearer the literary form of that speech than even the dialect of the Upper Doab. In fact the only difference is a slight broadening of the pronunciation, by which a final ō becomes au, and a final ē becomes ai. I have also noted the occasional use of kũ instead of kō as the sign of the Accusative-Dative, and the common instrumental in ō, as in bhūkhō, by hunger. In other respects the dialect of Western Rohilkhand does not differ from literary Hindōstānī. This will be evident from the following extract from the version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which comes from Bijnaur.

AMBALA.

The boundary line between Western Hindī and Pañjābī passes through the district of Ambala. Tahsils Rupar and Kharar, in the west of the district, speak Pañjābī, the rest of the district Western Hindī. The frontier between the two languages may be taken as the river Ghaggar.

The east of Ambala is separated from Saharanpur by the river Jamna, and the language of the Western Hindī tract of the former district differs very slightly from the vernacular Hindōstānī of the Upper Doab. It has naturally more of a Pañjābī flavour as we go west, and moreover, the speech of the lower castes has a stronger tincture of that language than that of the rest of the people.

For instance, the language spoken round Dera Basi, near the Ghaggar, which is called by its speakers 'Pahār-talī,' or the tongue of the country at the foot of the hills, has even Pañjābī phrases like us-dū, of him, though, on the whole, it is distinctly Hindōstānī. Similarly, a folk-tale from Chachhrauli, which is in the State of Kalsia, in the extreme east of the district, although so near to Saharanpur, has the Pañjābī form laggiā, for 'he began.' This was because the version was in the language of a Chamār grass-cutter.

The average Vernacular Hindōstānī of the Hindī area of Ambala is, however, on the whole remarkably free from Pañjābī influence. This will appear from the two specimens of it which I append, viz. a portion of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a statement made in court by an accused person. I further give the folk-tale mentioned above, which was told at Chachhrauli by a Chamār.

The district of Ambala includes two portions of the State of Kalsia, and it is convenient to consider the number of speakers of Vernacular Hindōstānī in the three areas together. We must also include some speakers of the same dialect who live in Nizāmat Panjaur of the Patiala State, which lies close to Ambala city. The number of speakers is as follows :—

| | | | | | | | | | |
|-------------------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---------|
| Ambala proper | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 506,500 |
| Kalsia (Chachhrauli) | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 40,233 |
| Kalsia (near Dera Basi) | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 18,933 |
| Patiala (Panjaur) | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 136,500 |
| TOTAL for Ambala | | | | | | | | | 702,166 |

In the specimens which illustrate the average dialect of Ambala we may note the influence of Pañjābī in the use of kīhā, for 'said'; bāḍ^anā, not bāḍ^ṭnā, to divide; and the use of nū or nō to indicate the dative. Amongst other local forms, we may note ōr or hōr, and ; pach^akārā, not puch^akārā, kissed; mā, in; man-nū, to me, and the employment of an oblique plural in ā, not ō, as in dōnā-nū, to both, and several other examples.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

My wife, Musammāt Mahtābī, had been suffering from quartan ague for two years, and had become very weak. One day she fell down in a swoon at the house, and was hurt by the fall. There was the handle of a grinding-mill and some fuel lying there. I did not beat her, she is my wife. It was Nānak who through enmity reported at the police station that I, Lēkhū, and my wife, his aunt, were quarrelling at home. My wife was thereupon sent for to the police station. She stated that no one had beaten her or struck her. That I was her lord and she my wife. The police sergeant then sent us off to court.

The following is a specimen of the dialect of the lower castes of the Ambala district. It is a folk-tale told by a Chamār of Chachhrauli.

Note the way in which a postposition is added, not to the noun itself, but to an oblique genitive, as in chamār-kē-nē, by a chamār. The dialect is fond of omitting aspirates, as in bī for bhī, also; mujē for mujhē, to me; tā for thā, was.

The sign of the case of the agent is nai, nē or nā̃. Both un-nai and an-nai are used for 'by them.' Yū̃ and jū̃ both mean 'thus.' Pān is 'five.' The influence of Pañjābī is shown in present participles like jāndā, knowing; in past participles in iā, like laggiā, began, dēkhiā, saw; and in the use of postpositions, such as nāl, with.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A cobbler once asked his mother for five seers of parched maize, as he wanted to go off to bring home his wife. Among what she gave him were some hard, unparched grains. As he went along the wind began to winnow his load, and blew away the parched grain, but left the heavy hard ones behind. Not caring a bit, he went along saying, 'let them come, let them go,' meaning it was all the same to him.

As he went along saying this, whom should he meet but some bird-catchers. 'What's that you're saying?' said they. 'Let them come, let them go,' replied he. So they beat him. 'That's not the thing to say to bird-catchers,' said they, 'you have let go the birds we caught.' 'I am very sorry,' said he. 'What should I say?' 'Why, you should say, "catch plenty of 'em, and carry plenty of 'em home,'" answered they.

Well, Sāhib, he went along the road saying, 'catch plenty of 'em, and carry plenty of 'em home,' when whom should he meet but a funeral procession carrying a corpse to the burning-place. 'Catch plenty of 'em, and carry plenty of 'em home,' says he. Then the mourners gave him a thrashing for using ill-omened language. 'I'm very sorry,' says he, 'but what should I say?' 'Why, of course,' replied they, 'when you meet a funeral you should say "ah, may the like of this never happen again."'

So he went along saying, 'ah, may the like of this never happen again,' and, by and bye, he met a wedding party. 'Ah, may the like of this never happen again,' says he. So they beat him. 'What should I say?' says he. 'Why, of course,' answered they, 'when you meet a wedding you should say, "may this happen over and over again."'

So he went along saying, 'may this happen over and over again,' when he came to a village on fire. So the villagers beat him, because he wanted fires like that everywhere.

At length he got to his mother-in-law's house. Evening came, and he was moon-blind. They called him in to dinner. His mother-in-law put his dinner quietly down before him. He thought she was a dog wanting to share his dinner, so he hit her on the head with his dish.

When night fell he had to get up for a certain purpose, and when he came back climbed on to his mother-in-law's bed thinking that it was his own. 'Who's there?' said she. Said he, 'I am only come to see if you are still sore from the blow I gave you.' 'Not a bit, my son,' replied she. Then said he, 'I don't believe it. I won't believe it till you get off my bed.' So she got off.

(Here the story ends abruptly. I am not certain that I have given the correct meaning of the last two sentences. It is the best sense I can make of it.)

BĀNGARŪ, JĀṬŪ OR HARIĀNĪ.

This dialect is spoken in the South-East Panjab, in the country to the north and west of Delhi, on the west of the Jamna. Its habitat is more particularly described in the Introduction (pp. 66 ff.). It is the Vernacular Hindōstānī of the Upper Doab much mixed with Pañjābī and Rājasthānī. A full account of its peculiarities will be found in the description of the Bāngarū of Karnal which follows. Its most prominent characteristics are the oblique plural of substantives which (as in Dakhinī Hindōstānī) follows Pañjābī and Rājasthānī in ending in ā̃, not ō̃, and the employment of the Rājasthānī verb substantive śā̃, I am.

BĀNGARŪ OF KARNAL AND PATIALA (NIRWANA).

The Bāngarū of Karnal and of the country round Nirwana in Patiala resembles in many respects the Vernacular Hindōstānī of Muzaffarnagar on the other side of the river Jamna. On the other hand it has all the typical peculiarities of the mixed dialects of the Eastern Panjab. It is in this latter point sharply distinguished from the dialect of Ambala, which is the same as that of the Upper Doab, with a varying amount of peculiarities borrowed from Pañjābī. The specimens of Ambala show hardly any of the marks which distinguish Bāngarū from the dialect of Muzaffarnagar, such, for instance, as the employment of sū to mean 'I am.' The only book describing Bāngarū that I have seen is Jātū, being some grammatical notes and a glossary of the language of the Rohtak Jāts, by Mr. E. Joseph, I.C.S., which originally appeared in the Journal and Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal (N. S.), Vol. VI (1910), pages 693 ff. Free use has been made of this in writing the present account. The following are the main peculiarities of Bāngarū which appear in the specimens.

PRONUNCIATION.

The vowel scale is not very definite. Thus we have kohāũ for kahāũ, I may be called; rehyā for rahā, remained; jubāb for jawāb, an answer; bōhat for bahut, much. The vowel ē and the diphthong ai are freely interchanged. Thus, the postposition of the instrumental and dative, nē, is often written nai, and the postposition of the dative and the ablative is both tē and tai. Similarly, the oblique form of the genitive postposition is both kē and kai. There is the same preference for cerebral ṇ and ḷ which we have noted in the Upper Doab, as in apṇā, own; hōṇā, to be; kāl, famine; chalan, conduct. When l is doubled, it is protected from cerebralisation, as in chālḷṇā, not chālḷṇā, to go; ghālḷṇā, not ghālḷṇā, to send. The sound of ḍ is preferred to that of ṛ, as in baḍā, not barā, great. The specimens, however, give a few instances of ṛ, as in parā, he fell; nērē, near, and Mr. Joseph gives an example of ṛ becoming l in khalā, for kharā, erect. There is the same tendency as in the Upper Doab to double medial consonants, with shortening of a preceding long vowel. When the preceding vowel is ā, it is not shortened in writing, but is pronounced short, like the a in the German 'mann.' Examples of this doubling are chāllyā, he went; ghāllyā, he sent; lāggē, they began; rājjī, pleased; bhittar, within; bhukkā, hungry; kāl, tomorrow, but kāl, time, with a real long ā.

DECLENSION.

Nouns are declined much as in ordinary Hindōstānī, except that the oblique plural ends in āũ, not ō. We have noted a few sporadic cases of this in the Upper Doab, and some more in Ambala. Here, as in Dakhinī Hindōstānī, Pañjābī, and Rājasthānī, it is the rule. The following are examples of the declension of substantives :—

| Sing | | Plur | |
|-------------------------|---------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| Nominative | Oblique | Nominative | Oblique |
| ghōrā , a horse | ghōrē | ghōrē | ghōrā̃ |
| bābbu , a father | bābbū | bābbū | bābbuā̃ |
| din , a day | din | din | dinā̃ |
| khēt , a field | khēt | khēt | khētā̃ |
| mānas , a man | mānas | mīnas | mānāsā̃ |
| baras , a year | baras | baras | barāsā̃ |
| chhōri , a girl | chhōri | chhōryā̃ | chhōryā̃ |
| bayyar , a woman | bayyar | bayyarā̃ | bayyarā̃ |

Note that the feminine nouns are irregular

The postpositions are employed rather indefinitely. In several instances, the same postposition is used for more than one case. The genitive takes kā as in ordinary Hindōstānī. Its masculine oblique form is kē or kai. Nē or nai is used not only for the case of the Agent, but also to indicate the dative and the accusative, corresponding to the Hindōstānī kō, thus, par-dēs-nē, to a foreign country. Tī, tē, or tai, is properly the sign of the ablative as in Hindōstānī, but is also used for the dative and the accusative, as in mai-nē chhōrē-tī mārīyā, I struck the boy. 'In' is mē or maī. Kānī-tī is given as a sign of the ablative. A good example of the twofold meaning of tī, tē, or tai, is in the sentence un rōpaya-tī us-tī lē-lō, take those rupees from him. Sitē forms an instrumental, as jīwaryā-sitē, (bind) with ropes.

The Pronouns show several peculiar forms. The first two personal pronouns are—

| I. | | Thou. | |
|------------|------------------------------|-------|-------------------------------|
| Sing. Nom. | mai | | thū, tū, taū. |
| Gen. | mērā, marā | | tērā, tarā. |
| Agent | mai-nē, mannē, mannai | | tai-nē, tannē, tannai. |
| Dat. | mannē, mannai | | tannē, tannai. |
| Plur. Nom. | ham, hamē | | tham, tamhē. |
| Gen. | mhārā | | thārā. |
| Agent | mhā-nē, -nai | | thā-nē, -nai. |
| Dat. | mhā-nē, -nai | | thā-nē, -nai. |

The Demonstrative pronouns are yāūh, yoh, yū, this; nom. fem. yāh; sing. obl. is; nom. plur. yē, yaī; obl. in: āūh, oh, he, that; nom. fem. wāh; sing. obl. us; plur. waī, oh; obl. un. The relative pronoun is jō or jaun, obl. sing. jis. The interrogative pronouns are kaun, who? obl. sing. kis; and kē or kai, what? Id is 'now.'

VERBS.

A.—Auxiliary Verbs and Verbs Substantive.

The present tense is as follows :—

| Sing. | Plur. |
|------------------------|---------------------|
| 1. sũ, sã, I am | saĩ, sẽ, sã. |
| 2. sai, sē | sō. |
| 3. sai, sē | saĩ, sẽ. |

This is the usual form. Sometimes h is substituted for s, so that we get hũ, etc.

The past tense is thā, etc., as in Hindōstānī.

B.—Active Verb.

The tense which in Hindōstānī is employed as a present subjunctive, is here also employed in its original sense of a simple present. It is conjugated as follows, closely agreeing with Dakhinī Hindōstānī.

| Sing. | Plur. |
|--------------------------------|---------------------------|
| 1. mārũ, mārã, I strike | māraĩ, mārẽ, mārã. |
| 2. mārai, mārē | mārō. |
| 3. mārai, mārē | māraĩ, mārẽ. |

The definite present is formed either by suffixing the present tense of the auxiliary verb to the present participle, as in book-Hindōstānī, or to the simple present, as in the Upper Doab. Thus, maĩ mār'dā-sũ or maĩ mārũ-sũ, I am striking.

The imperfect is formed by conjugating the past tense of the verb substantive with the present participle, as in book-Hindōstānī, or with the verbal noun in ē, as in the Upper Doab. Thus, maĩ mār'dā-thā, or maĩ mārē-thā, I was striking. In Rohtak the principle followed is the same as that of the definite present, as in maĩ mārũ-thā, I was striking.

The future is formed, on the same principle as in Hindōstānī, by suffixing gā (gē, gī) to the simple present. Thus, mārãgā, I shall strike.

The past tenses are formed from the past participle on the usual principle. Thus, mannē mār̄yā, I beat him.

Mr. Joseph gives a past conditional formed either as in Hindōstānī, or, more usually, by suffixing hai to the simple present. The latter principle is that followed by Lahndā, which suffixes hā in the same way. Examples of each form of this tense, given by Mr. Joseph, are :—

- (1) Jē thōrā pānī na hōtā, tō tōr̄ charh jātā, if so little water had not been (running), it would have flowed up (on to the fields).
- (2) Jē maĩ nyũ karũ-hai, tō maĩ marũ-(hai), if I had done so, I should have died. As indicated by marks of parenthesis the hai may be omitted in the apodosis.

The present participle is mār'dā, with d instead of t.

The past participle is mār̄yā; masc. obl. mārē; fem. mārī.

The infinitive is māraṇ or mār̄nā.

The irregular verbs seem to be as in ordinary Hindōstānī, except that I have noted āṇ-kai, having come; and mannē karā-sai, I have done. Jān, to go, has its past participle both gayā and giyā.

The usual negative is nāhĩ. When the verb is in the first person we have also nĩ, as in maĩ nĩ jānũ, I do not know. With the Imperative mat or mat-nā is used, as in mat-nā chaliyō, do not go (Mr. Joseph).

VOCABULARY.

Several peculiar words are used. I have noted the following in the specimens. Many of them are borrowed from Pañjābī.

| dhur , distance. | turaṇ , to go. |
| ḍhabī , a friend. | ṭābar , a child. |
| ḍhāṇḍī , a cow. | ṭallā , service. |
| ḍhūṇḍ , a house. | urāi , urē , there. |
| gail , with. | wār , delay. |
| giyān , matter, affair. | |
| hāṭ , a shop. | |
| ib , ibbī , ibbai , now. | |
| jaryaṭ , a son. | |
| jib , then, also when. | |

The following specimen comes from Karnal. It was originally written in the Persian character, which does not show the cerebral n and l. These were shown in the transliteration which accompanied the copy in the Persian character. I have transcribed it into the Nāgarī character, which is more appropriate. I also give a transcription in the Roman character. An interlinear translation is unnecessary.

BĀNGARŪ (JĀṬŪ).

The Bāngarū of Rohtak, which is locally called Jāṭū, or the language of the Jāts, is practically the same as that of the foregoing specimen. The only point to notice is that the letter y is not used in the past participle of verbs. Thus, kaḥā, not kaḥyā. We may also note the idiomatic use of the oblique form of the genitive as an oblique base in mārē-sē, from me.

As a specimen I give a short story illustrating the reputed avarice of the people of the Ahīr (or, as they are locally called, Hīr) caste. An Ahīr has promised to give his son-in-law whatever he asks for. When the son-in-law asks for a very petty present, the Ahīr invents all kinds of excuses to get off giving it.

It is printed, as received, in the Persian character. It may also be taken as a specimen of the Jāṭū of Delhī.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was a certain Ahīr who had fallen sick. His son-in-law came to visit him. It happened that he was a little better on the day that the son-in-law came. He asked his brother who the young fellow was. 'Our son-in-law,' was the reply. 'Which son-in-law?' 'Jaikālī's husband.' Then said the Ahīr to his son-in-law, 'Sir, today I feel better, and it is owing to your coming. You must ask me for a present.' The son-in-law replied, 'Sir, if I do ask, you won't give.' Said the Ahīr, 'why should I not give? It is your coming here which has done me so much good. Ask what you like, and I'll give it you.' Then said the son-in-law, 'give me that four-pronged corn-rake, which you have.' Said the Ahīr, 'that corn-rake is just what I can't give you. I've had it in my family for three generations, and it is the one which my poor old father, Hukamlā, used to work with. Besides it has rings on its joints. It's a regular bit of my heart, so it is. I have broken off three marriages rather than part with it, when it was asked for as part of the dowry. How on earth can I give it?'

BĀNGARŪ (HARIĀNĪ).

As a specimen of what is called Hariānī, I give the following excellent folktale from the Jind Tahsīl of the Jind State. The language is the same as in the other specimens. We may, however, note the following cases of exceptional pronunciation. Kah^anā, to say, has for its infinitive kai^hn, almost pronounced kaihn. Its causal is kauhān, to cause to say. Maĩgaṇ is for māḡ^anā, to ask, beg. In balāṇ, to summon, u or o has become a.

The verb rahaṇ, to remain, is much contracted. Thus we have rē-thē for rahē-thē, and rhyā for rahyā (standard Hindī rahā).

The verbs dēṇ, to give, and lēṇ, to take, prefer the vowel ī to the vowel ē in conjugation. Thus we have diāḡā, I (masc.) will give; dīḡī, I (fem.) will give.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a Brāhmaṇ and his wife. The Brāhmaṇ lived by begging. He would go out and come home with a little flour. One day his wife said to him, 'the king of this village is Rājā Bhōj, and he is in the habit of making Brāhmaṇs recite verses before him and of then giving them a gold coin.¹ You should also go and recite a verse before him.' 'But,' said the Brāhmaṇ, 'I don't know any verse.' 'Never mind,' replied his wife 'I'll teach you one.' So she taught him the verse beginning 'pice in your poke.'² He went to the king, and recited his verse, and his Majesty gave him a reward³ of a hundred rupees, and sent him home.

Well, King Bhōj put pice in his poke,—that is to say, he filled a saddle-bag with rupees, and started out for a riding-tour. By and bye he came to the village where lived his father-in-law. (His wife at the time was on a visit to her father.) He put up for the night in a confectioner's shop. While he was hospitably entreating him, the confectioner forgot the time, and finding himself late, hurried off to the palace. Every day he used to go to the palace of King Bhōj's queen, and serve her with cates. This day, in his hurry, he ran off, but forgot to take the cates with him. As he began to climb the rope ladder into the palace, King Bhōj made up his mind to see what was the matter, and followed him to its foot. Her Majesty⁴ said to the confectioner, 'well, have

Svadāra-dhana-ratnāni nija-vatyāni kārayēt ;

Anyathā tāni gacchhanti tyaktvā kāpurushādhamam

A man should always keep his wife, his money, and his jewels, in his own possession ; otherwise they go off, and leave the poor wretch lamenting.

This has been crystallised into the Hindī proverb, paissā gāth-kā, jōrū sāth-kī, keep your pice in your poke, and your wife in your company. The first half of this is identical with the text.

The gāth is the knot in the waistband which serves as a purse. The story shows how King Bhōj kept only half the advice. He did not keep his wife with him, and hence she tried to get him murdered. He had, however, pice in his poke, and these saved his life.

³ Niām is a corruption of in'ām.

you brought the cates ?' The poor confectioner had to confess that he had forgotten them, and so she picked up a whip and began to lay it on him. Now, it happened that King Bhōj had four cates of his own, wrapped up in his cloth, so, when he heard what was going on, he threw his kerchief and its contents in through the window. 'Where did these come from ?' said the queen. All the poor confectioner could say was 'God sent them.' She tasted them, and said, 'confectioner, when I was carried off to my father-in-law's house after being married, I was there given cates with just the same smack. Have you any traveller staying in your house ?' 'Yes, there is one,' said the confectioner,—'a man who came on horse-back.' 'Then,' replied she, 'take these four hundred rupees, and go and get that traveller murdered.'

So the confectioner climbed down the ladder, and sent for four executioners. 'Brothers,' said he, 'here are four hundred rupees. Take this traveller off into the forest and kill him.' So they caught hold of King Bhōj, and carried him off. 'Brothers,' said he, 'what are you going to do to me ?' 'We're going to kill you dead,' said they. 'And how much are you to get for the job ?' asked the king. 'We're to get four hundred rupees,' answered they. 'Well, brothers,' said the king, 'I'll give you five hundred rupees not to kill me dead, and I'll promise not to enter your city again so long as I live.' So he gave them five hundred rupees, and they let him go.

Thus, you see, the Brāhman's verse turned out true. King Bhōj had pice in his poke, and that is how he saved his life.

OLD BRAJ BHĀKHĀ.

I now proceed to give specimens of old literary Braj Bhākhā. To those able to read them transliteration and interlinear translation will be unnecessary. I therefore, in each case, give only the text in the vernacular character, and a literal translation. A short extract from the Sūr Sāgar is here given in order to illustrate the Braj Bhākhā of the sixteenth century.

TRANSLATION.

[Kṛishṇa has persuaded the cowherds of Gōkula to abandon the worship of Indra, and instead to offer homage to Mount Govardhana. The verses describe how they bring offerings of food to the mountain.]

In every house in Braj are they preparing food, and joyful music is being played in the doorway of each. The inhabitants of Gōkul and Braj all yoked their carts and carried off the offerings to the God. Salted tyre did they prepare and sweetmeats of honey. How am I to tell all the exceeding quantity of it. Cates did they despatch from every house, as they issued from the village and came to the cultivated land around it. There did the inhabitants form a wondrous collection, broad as the shoreless ocean. No one had to go on foot for they travelled in the carts which carried the provisions. From Prince Nand's¹ house alone went forth a thousand carts, so how many others were there of the other houses? Says Sūr-dās, the Lord is an Ocean of Majesty, and he became manifest in Gōkul as the youthful Hari.

¹ Nand was the leader of the cowherds, and the foster-father of Kṛishṇa, who was an incarnation of Vishnu (Hari). The tradition that these cowherds travelled en masse in carts is very old, and is not without historical importance. This mode of conveyance, used by a whole tribe, is elsewhere unknown in Northern India. The legend has been used to support the theory that these cowherd worshippers of the infant Kṛishṇa were members of a pastoral tribe that had migrated from Central Asia, bringing with them reminiscences of the Gospels of the Infancy. See Mr. J. Kennedy in J. R. A. S., 1907, pp. 951 ff.

I next give a few of the easier verses of the Sat-saī of Bihārī, as examples of the Braj Bhākhā of the seventeenth century.

TRANSLATION.

1. THE SPRING.

In every quarter appears the array of gardens and of groves in blossom. (Each flower is a Cupid's shaft) and it is as though the King of Seasons had built a cage of these arrows (in which to imprison) fair ones distraught by love.

2. THE HOT SEASON.

This is not a mighty conflagration. 'Tis the fierce hot winds blowing on every side. The summer is, as it were, heaving hot sighs for the departed spring.

3. THE BREEZE.

From the (sandal-scented) south country, there comes a wanderer,—the breeze. He lingers beneath each tree. The sweat (upon his brow) is the nectar which (he has gathered from) the flowers on his way.

Finally, I give an extract from the Rāj-nīti, to illustrate the Braj Bhākhā of the early part of the 19th century.

TRANSLATION.

On the bank of the river Gōdāvari was a silk-cotton tree, on which birds of every quarter used to roost. One day, very early in the morning, a crow named Laghupatanaka, awoke and saw a hunter approaching from a distance, like the God of Death himself. He screamed out and began to remark (what an unlucky omen it was that) the first thing he should see on the dawn of that day was an unscrupulous villainous countenance. 'Who knows,' thought he, 'what is going to happen next.' Having thus considered, the crow Laghupatanaka flew away. For it is said,—

'A wise man remains not in the place of calamity ;

'But a fool stays there, and sups fear and sorrow.'

In the meantime the hunter scattered grains of husked rice at the foot of the tree and over them spread his net. There came flying Chitragrīva (the king of the pigeons) with his family. One of them said, 'I should like to have a peck at that husked rice.' But Chitragrīva said, 'hullo, how does husked rice come into this forest? This is something quite out of the way. I therefore don't like the look of it.'

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF ALIGARH.

To the north-east of Muttra lies the district of Aligarh. Here the language is Braj Bhākhā, but it has some prominent local peculiarities, or, at least, has peculiarities which do not occur in the specimens received from Muttra.

I give two specimens of the Braj Bhākhā of Aligarh, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a Folksong. The following points may be noted :—

Pronunciation.—There is a tendency of the letter r to disappear when it precedes a consonant, which is doubled in compensation. Thus, naukannu-sũ, for naukaranu-sũ, from the servants. This is very common in the Bhadauri form of Bundēli. The letter w when preceded by a long vowel often becomes m. Thus, manāman, for manāwan, to celebrate; bāman, fifty two; rōmati, she (was) weeping. Ky is sometimes softened to ch, as in chõ for kyõ, why. J before d sometimes becomes d, as in bhēd-dayau for bhēj-dayau, he sent. A final aspirate surd consonant is disaspirated, as in hāt for hāth, a hand. In the word kulaph for qufl, a bolt, consonants have been transposed.

Declension.—A final short u is added to weak nouns even more commonly than in standard Braj Bhākhā. The u is retained in all cases and both numbers. Thus, bāp or bāpu, a father; bāpu-sũ, (he said) to the father; khētanu-mẽ, in the fields; majūranu-kau, of the servants. In one instance we find the word rājai used as the accusative-dative of rājā, a king.

The postpositions are as in standard Braj Bhākhā, but we have also nu (as well as nē) for the agent, as in tum-nu mah"mānī karī-ē, you have given a feast, and kẽ (as well as kũ) for the accusative-dative, as in ēk janē-kẽ, to a certain man.

In the Pronouns, the accusative-dative of mai is mōy or mōē, as in the standard, and mō-ū-ē is 'me also.' The pronoun of the third person is very peculiar. It is gu or gwa with an accusative-dative gwai, and an oblique form gwā. The plural is gwē, oblique guni. With it is connected gwā (often written nwā, व्वा), there = wahā. 'This' is ji; accusative-dative jāy; oblique, jā.

The present of the Verb Substantive is—

| Sing. | Plur |
|-------------|-----------|
| 1. ũ | ẽ |
| 2. ē | au |
| 3. ē | ẽ |

No doubt ē is often pronounced ai, and ẽ, aĩ. The Past Tense masculine is ō (or au), plural ē. In other words, in Aligarh the initial h of standard Braj Bhākhā is dropped.

When the verb substantive is used as an auxiliary with a present participle, the two are sometimes joined so as to form one word. Thus, mar"tũ for marat-ũ, I am dying. Hatu-ē is used to mean, he is. The conjunctive participle which is hwai in standard Braj Bhākhā, becomes hai in Aligarh. Thus, hai-gayau, for hwai-gayau, he became.

In all verbs the sign of the conjunctive participle is kẽ, not kat.

Braj Bhākhā is reported to be spoken in Aligarh by 992,200 people.

The next specimen from Aligarh is a popular song in four verses. It tells the story of the departure of Nala and his Queen, Damayanti, from his home and kingdom. Nala had been ruined by gambling and lost all that he possessed. The whole tale is one of the most famous in Indian literature.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

1. The gold and silver palaces of King Nala all were turned to brass. There were store-houses (pits) on this side and that, but not a handful of grain was left. All his substance was reduced to charcoal, earth, and ashes. His chains of gold, they too changed into brass, and brass itself to iron. The Queen thus counsels the King: 'Forsake, my lord, thy attachment to the city.' Bound for the journey both the King and Queen stand at the threshold.

2. Queen Damayanti who had slept at ease throughout the four months of the rainy season, is now weighed down with anxiety thinking of the journey. She counts her jewels. She gives the parting embrace to each pillar of her home, she weeps as if her very heart would break. King Nala arranges his arrows. He closes his crystal palaces, does King Nala, and locks the store-houses. Saluting the fort King Nala takes up his scimitar Jwālā-mukhī, and hangs the crimson bow over his shoulders, while in his waistband he put his counters and his dice.'

3. The King and the Queen then issue forth to the gate. With humble steps the King goes round the fort and addresses it as follows: 'Stand firm, for ever, ye moat and walls, although we must part. Listen, O Fort, the time has come that we must bid farewell, for the Fates have ordained that we must be separated. Seated here in thee I held sway over fifty-two other forts, but henceforth must I seek my bread elsewhere. I will return if life last; if not, death will have summoned me. But, O dear brother Fort, feel not thou care on my account.' Nala shed hot tears while he thus addressed the fort.

4. The King weeps and weeps the Queen; and the heart of the stony fort melts. 'Listen to me, O King, when thou didst build me, why didst not thou construct for me a pair of hands. Thou didst collect the builders and they made the towers high and low, and laid the foundations deep; but why didst not thou shape a pair of feet for me. Had I feet I would go with ye and share half your troubles. Alas! I am helpless, held fast, O jewel of Narbar, as I am in the grasp of Bāsukī.²'

² Bāsukī supports the earth. The meaning is that the fort cannot accompany the king as it is rooted in the earth.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF AGRA.

Four principal dialects have been reported as spoken in the district of Agra. The town of Agra, the head-quarters of the district, was for many years the capital of the Mughul emperors, hence we have here, and in the country immediately surrounding it, Urdū. In the south of the district, on the bank of the Chambal, the language is the Bhadaurī form of Bundelī. The rest of the district is divided into two nearly equal parts by a line running approximately north and south. To the west of this line, in the country touching the district of Muttra and the State of Bhartpur, the local officials report the dialect to be Braj Bhākhā: to its east, in the country bounded by Aligarh, Etah, and Mainpuri, they call the dialect simply ‘ Gāw-wārī ’ or ‘ Kharī Bōlī.’ As will be seen from the specimens, both of these are Braj Bhākhā,—the western dialect agreeing with that of Muttra, and the eastern closely resembling that of Aligarh.

The following are the language figures for the district of Agra :—

These figures are based on the census of 1891.

As a specimen of the form of Braj Bhākhā spoken on the west of the district, I give the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It will be seen that it is quite the same as the dialect of Muttra.

The Braj Bhākhā spoken in the east of Agra is almost the same as that of Aligarh. It has all the peculiarities of the dialect of the latter district, including the typical pronoun of the third person gu or gwa.

The only important local peculiarity (which also exists to a less extent elsewhere in the Braj Bhākhā tract) is the tendency to drop the y in the past participle. Thus, chatau instead of chalyau. In the specimen we may also notice the following —

An instrumental singular in anī, as bhūkhani, by hunger, and an oblique plural in enu, as in kamērenu-kū̃, to servants. Note also the frequent use of contractions observed also in other forms of Braj, Kanaujī, and Bundēlī. Such are khātaĩ, for khut-aĩ, are eating; dēlō, for dēt-ō, he was giving; and matṭū̃, for marat-ū̃, I am dying.

The specimen consists of the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF DHOLPUR.

To the south of the district of Agra, and, on the east, separated from Gwalior by the river Chambal, lies the State of Dholpur. Here the language is good Braj Bhākhā. The only local peculiarities which I have noticed are the tendency to omit the letter y in the past tenses of verbs (thus, parau instead of paryau, he fell), and the occasional use of the termination ani instead of an for the instrumental singular (e.g. bhūkhani, for bhūkhan, by hunger). Both of these irregularities also occur in Eastern Agra.

We may also note the word bhā̃, for wahā̃, there.

The number of speakers of Braj Bhākhā in Dholpur is estimated to be 262,335.

JĀDŌBĀṬĪ.

The State of Karauli consists partly of plains country, and partly, on the north, south, and east, of broken hill country, known as the Dāṅg. In the Dāṅg we find a number of broken dialects, mixtures of Braj Bhākhā and Jaipurī which will be discussed later on (vide pp. 329 ff.). The plains country is inhabited mainly by Rājput̃s of the Yādava or Jādō̃ tribe. This tribe also extends across the Chambal into the Gwalior State, where it occupies the district of Sabalgarh, and the north of the district of Shiopur. Over the whole of the tract in which these Yādavas dwell, the local dialect is known as Jādōbāṭī. This is good Braj Bhākhā, purer even than in Dholpur immediately to its north, for it preserves the y in the past tense. A few lines of the Parable will make this clear.

The only local peculiarities which we may notice are the following :—

The word lahurau, younger, is contracted to lhaurau, which is also common in the Dāṅgs, and in Jaipurī. Bhēṭhānī (literally, in that place) is used to mean ‘there.’ This too occurs in the Dāṅgs, where we have also bhyā and mhā in the same meaning.

The number of speakers of this Jādōbāṭī form of Braj is reported to be as follows :—

SIKARWĀRĪ.

North of the tract in the State of Gwalior in which Jādōbātī is spoken, and opposite the State of Dholpur, from which it is separated by the river Chambal, lies the Gwalior District of Sikarwar, which is the country of the Sikarwār Rājputs. Here also a form of Braj Bhākhā is found, which is known as Sikarwārī. It is not nearly so pure as the Jādōbātī to its south or the Braj Bhākhā to its west. Immediately to its east, in the rest of the Gwalior State the dialect is Bundēlī, mainly the Bhadaurī variety. Hence Sikarwārī is much mixed with Bundēlī. Jādōbātī has been preserved from contamination by that dialect owing to the traditions of the tribe which speaks it, whose history centres round Muttra. Sikarwārī has had nothing of the sort to preserve it. It is reported to be spoken by 127,000 people. As a specimen I give a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The following are the local peculiarities. It will be recognised that they are nearly all due to the neighbouring Bundēlī.

The termination ō is everywhere preferred to au, and the termination of the past participle is ō, not yau. Thus, chukō, he finished; parō, he fell. There is the Bhadaurī love for contraction, as in chatt for charat, grazing; matt for marat, dying. As in Bhadaurī, vowels are apt to change, as in keh for kahi, having said. So, also, there is a negative verb substantive, as in nānē, I am not. The past tense of the verb substantive is katō or hō, as in Bundēlī. The conjunctive participle is hai-kē, not hwai-kai.

Note also the word for 'there.' It is bhēṭhōnī or bhai. Compare Jādōbātī bhēṭhānī, and the Dāngī bhyā and mhā.

The word for 'I' is hū. This is here used not only for the nominative, but also for the oblique singular, as in hū-nē, by me, and hū-kō, to me. In standard Hindōstānī, the reverse has taken place, for in it maṛ, I, is by origin an oblique form.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF ETAH.

The District of Etah lies between Aligarh, in which the dialect is Braj bhākhā, and Farukhabad, where Kanaui is spoken. The Etah dialect is nearly pure Braj Bhākhā. It does not show any of the peculiarities of Aligarh, but agrees much more closely with the standard of Muttra. The only local peculiarity is the preference of the termination ō, instead of the Braj Bhākhā au. Also y is dropped in the past participle, so that we have forms like chalō instead of chalyau, he went. These are Kanaui peculiarities, and are to be expected from the geographical position of the country in which they are found. We may also note the Braj Bhākhā change of w to m, as in jāmē, they may take away, and the usual tendency to contraction, as in pōchō, for pahūchō, he arrived; kā, for kahā, there; and bā, for bahā or wahā, there. Note also the contraction ṭhākus-sā, for ṭhākur-sāhib, in which we have the common elision of r before another consonant with doubling of the latter. The contraction sa for sāhib, is found in widely distant parts of India, e.g. both in Kāshmīrī and in Bihārī. Note also the Braj Bhākhā spelling hāt for hāth, a hand.

The specimen of the Etah dialect is a folk-tale illustrating the stupidity of the men of the Kōrī, or Hindū weaver, caste. In Indian folklore weavers, whether Hindūs or Musalmāns, occupy the place of the fool of European story. In the present tale, a Kōrī is taken on forced labour by his Ṭhākur landlord, and exhibits the usual desperate silliness of his tribe.

asked-for-is.'

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was a Ṭhākur. He caught a Kōrī for forced labour, and taking him with his mare departed to his wife's home. Then the mother of the Kōrī said, 'O son, when the Ṭhākur is in a good humour, ask for 2½ seers of cotton.' The Kōrī departed with the Ṭhākur. When the Ṭhākur went inside his wife's house, he entrusted his mare to the Kōrī and warned him to take care that it was not taken away by thieves. At midnight the Kōrī slept, and some thieves took away the mare. At morning when the mare could not be found, the Kōrī, taking the bridle, went to the upper-room where the Ṭhākur was sleeping and said, 'O Ṭhākur Sāhib, *Aṭlan Khunkhun*¹ is with me, have you taken away Hunkhun?' Hearing this the Ṭhākur got up and ran to search for the mare. The Kōrī went with him. On the way they came to a stream. The Ṭhākur handed over his sword to the Kōrī and ordered him to cross over with him. When they had just reached the middle of the stream the sword fell out from its scabbard. Said the Kōrī, 'O Ṭhākur Sāhib, the kernel has fallen out and only the shell has remained with me.' The Ṭhākur asked where it had fallen out. Then the Kōrī threw the sheath into the stream and pointed out, 'there is where it has fallen.' The scabbard also flowed away. On this the Ṭhākur laughed heartily. Then the Kōrī folding his hands said, 'Good Ṭhākur, my mammy has asked for 2½ seers of cotton.'²

¹ Aṭlan Khunkhun is meant to represent the jingling sound of the bridle, and Hunkhun, the neighing of the mare.

² The Ṭhākur, of course, laughed at the stupidity of the Kōrī; but the latter thought he was pleased with him, and hence put in his petition for the cotton.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF MAINPURI.

Immediately to the south of Etah lies the District of Mainpurī. The following specimen from that locality shows that the dialect is just the same as that of Etah. There is the same tendency to use the Kanaujī termination ō instead of au, and to omit the y of the past participle. The specimen consists of the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. There are several examples of the elision of r with doubling of the following consonant. Thus, khachchu for kharchu, expenditure; kad-daō for kar-daō, he made; mann for maran, to die: and mattu for maratu, dying.

This form of Braj Bhākhā is spoken over the whole of the district except in the extreme south-west, on the banks of the Jamna, where we find about 8,000 people employing the Bhadauri form of Bundēlī.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF BAREILLY.

North of Budaun lies the district of Bareilly with the district of Pilibhit to its east and the State of Rampur to its west. The dialect of the former is Kanaujī (with an admixture of Braj Bhākhā), and of the latter Hindōstānī.

The dialect spoken in Bareilly is good Braj Bhākhā. The only local peculiarities which I have noticed are the use of ō instead of au as the termination of strong adjectives, and the form ban or bahu for 'he.' The verbs dēnaū, to give, and lēnaū, to take, make their past participles dawō, and lawō, after the Kanaujī fashion, instead of diyan or dayan. We may also note that owing to the fact that Bareilly was long under Musalmān domination there is a greater use of Arabic and Persian words than in the Braj Bhākhā tract proper.

The population of Bareilly was 1,040,691 in 1891. The languages spoken were (taking corrected figures) divided as follows :—

|---|-----------|
| Braj Bhākhā (wrongly returned as Rohilkhandī) | 857,213 |
| Urdū | 180,060 |
| Other languages | 3,478 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 1,040,691 |
| | <hr/> |

The Urdū is spoken principally by Musalmāns, by Kāyasths, and in the towns.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF BULANDSHAHR.

Bulandshahr is the most northern district of the Doab in which Braj Bhākhā is spoken. Beyond it lies Meerut, of which the language is ordinary Vernacular Hindōstānī. The Braj Bhākhā of Bulandshahr does not vary much from that of Muttra. The main difference is the preference for the termination ō, instead of the au which is so characteristic of the standard form of the dialect. Even this is probably only a question of spelling and not of pronunciation, for in Muttra, where the au-sound undoubtedly exists, it is as often as not represented by ō, in writing.

Bulandshahr is separated from Muttra by Aligarh, but we do not find the pronoun of the third person, gu, which is so prominent in the latter district.

On the other hand, we sometimes meet with a few instances of borrowing from the Hindōstānī of Meerut,—usually the employment of the termination ā instead of ō or au. Thus, hamārā for hamārō. These borrowings, as might be expected, occur in the north of the district on the Meerut border.

The Hindōstānī of Meerut is called by those natives of India who live to its east Pachhārī, i.e. the language of the west. The original rough list of the languages of Bulandshahr showed 939,000 people as speaking Pachhārī, and 2,000 as speaking Braj Bhākhā. The local authorities evidently meant that there 939,000 people used a language differing from Braj Bhākhā. The difference consists, as explained above, in the occasional use of Pachhārī expressions. The basis of the whole is, however, undoubtedly Braj Bhākhā, so that we are justified in putting the number of speakers of that dialect in Bulandshahr as 941,000, it being remembered that about 2,000, in the south of the district, speak it more purely than elsewhere. This will be evident from the following specimen which consists of the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son :—

The following are the main peculiarities of the Bulandshahr Braj Bhākhā. The sign of the accusative dative is kō, and not kū. The accusative plurals of the first two personal pronouns are hamē and tumhē, and their genitive plurals are hamārā and tumhārā. The nominative singular of the pronoun of the third person is wō or wā. The past tense of the auxiliary verb is hō, not hau, and its masculine plural is hē or hai. Finite verbs form their present and imperfect tense with a form in ē, instead of atu. Thus, ham rahē hai, I am living; sūar charē-hē, the pigs were grazing; pēt bharē-hē, he was filling his belly. So, kōi dē-nāi, no one was giving. This peculiarity, and also the forms hamē, etc. are also found in Meerut.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ (KATHĒRIYĀ) OF BUDAUN.

North of Etah, across the Ganges, lies the district of Budaun, in Rohilkhand. Here also Braj Bhākhā (not Rōhilkhaṇḍī as originally reported) is spoken. The dialect is locally known as Kaṭhēriyā, from Kaṭhēr, the name of Eastern Rohilkhand, although the true Kaṭhēr country is to the north in the district of Bareilly. North-west of Budaun lies the district of Moradabad, the dialect of which is Hindōstānī, and hence we see traces of the influence of that dialect in Budaun. Such are the use of thā (plural thē), as well as hō for 'was'; of us as well as wā, him; and of kō for the accusative-dative as well as for the genitive. The only peculiar local form which I have noticed is tumhrō, for tumhārō, your. For adjectives and participles, the termination ō is preferred to au.

As a specimen, I give a short extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It is in the Persian character, as received from the local officers.

The number of speakers of Kaṭhēriyā in Budaun is reported to be 826,500.

THE BHUKSĀ DIALECT OF THE TARĀI.

The Tarāi parganas of the Naini-Tal district run by the foot of the Kumaon Hills along the northern border of the State of Rampur and the districts of Bareilly and Pilibhit. The dialect of Rampur is Hindōstānī, of Bareilly Braj Bhākhā, and of Pilibhit Kanaujī. The Tarāi is inhabited by a number of broken hill tribes, such as the Thārūs and Bhuksās, as well as by immigrants from the plains. These have developed a mongrel mixed dialect, made up of Hindōstānī, Braj Bhākhā, and Kanaujī, with an infusion of the Kumaunī of the hills. The Thārūs and Bhuksās have lost their aboriginal languages, if they ever had one. The dialect has been returned as ' Bhuksā ' from the name of one of these tribes. I class it as a form of Braj Bhākhā, but it might just as easily appear as a form of Kanaujī. The number of its speakers is reported to be 199,521.

A brief extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will suffice as an example of this dialect, and well illustrates its mixed character.

In the first sentence we have kā used as a sign of the oblique genitive, which comes from Kumaunī. In the next line we have kā as the sign of the direct genitive which is Hindōstānī. So are kō, the sign of the accusative-dative and words like mērā, my, and others. On the other hand, hē, were, is Braj Bhākhā, while dāo, gave, gaō, went, are Kanaujī. The only peculiar form which I have noticed is nāi (beside nē) as the sign of the agent case.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ MERGING INTO RĀJASTHĀNĪ.

To the south of Braj Bhākhā lie the Mēwātī and Jaipurī dialects of Rājasthānī, into both of which it gradually merges. In Gurgaon we see it becoming Mēwātī. In the State of Bharatpur we notice the first signs of the influence of Jaipurī, which becomes stronger as we go south, until in the Dāngs, or broken country in the south of that State, in Karauli, and in the east of Jaipur, we find a number of sub-dialects which are grouped together under the name of Dāngī. The number of speakers of these intermediate forms of Braj Bhākhā are reported to be as follows :—

| | | | | | | | | | | | | |
| Gurgaon | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 149,700 |

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF GURGAON.

The district of Gurgaon is under the Government of the Panjab. It has the river Jamna to its east, being separated by it from the district of Aligarh. To its south lie the district of Muttra, and the State of Bharatpur. In Gurgaon there are three principal dialects, viz. Ahīrwātī and Mēwātī, which are forms of Rājasthānī, and Braj Bhākhā, spoken by 119,700 people, in Palwal Tahsīl, where the district meets Aligarh and Muttra.

The Braj Bhākhā spoken in Gurgaon is very fairly pure. It bears slight traces of the influence of the neighbouring Rājasthānī. Such are the use of the termination ō instead of au, for adjectives and participles, and the masculine form of the genitive singular (e.g. baṭ-kō, not baṭ-kau, of a share); the oblique ending ā, instead of ē; and the use of the Rājasthānī form of the Present Definite tense, as explained under the head of Braj.

The use of ō for au is also common in the neighbouring State of Bharatpur. The oblique ending is usually ē, as in good Braj, but now and then we meet ā, as in thā, they were.

The word jab is used to mean 'then,' as well as 'when,' as in Rājasthānī. The imperfect tense is also formed as in that language, by adding the past tense of the auxiliary verb to the verbal noun in ē, as in chāhē-hō, I was, thou wast, or he was wishing. The past tense of the auxiliary verb is usually hō (plural hō) as in Braj Bhākhā, but sometimes thō (plural thā) is borrowed from Rājasthānī. The past participle of verbs ends in either yō or ō, as in kahyō or kahō, he said.

An extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be a sufficient specimen.

BRAJ BHĀKHĀ OF BHARATPUR.

To the south of the district of Muttra lies the State of Bharatpur. The main language of the State is Braj Bhākhā. Only in the north-west, on the border of Alwar, is Mēwātī spoken, and, on the south-west, in the hill-country bordering on Kerauli, Dāngī. The former is a dialect of Rājasthānī, and the latter, a broken mixture of that language and Braj Bhākhā. To the west of Bharatpur lies the Rājasthānī-speaking State of Jaipur. Hence, although the Braj Bhākhā of Bharatpur is on the whole fairly pure, it shows traces of the influence of Rājasthānī.

The following figures show the estimated number of speakers of the three dialects in Bharatpur:—

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|-------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---------|
| Braj Bhākhā | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 502,303 |
| Dāngī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 40,000 |
| Mēwātī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 80,000 |
| TOTAL | | | | | | | | | | | | . | 622,303 |

As a specimen of the Braj Bhākhā of Bharatpur I give the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The following are the local peculiarities, mostly borrowed from Rājasthānī, which differentiate it from the Standard dialect of Muttra.

Instead of the termination au for strong adjectives and participles we have ō. Thus, diyō, he gave; paryō, he fell. Sometimes, however, we also find au, as in bhalau, good; ūchau, high.¹ There is a strong tendency to nasalise a final vowel, as in janē-kē, to a man; apⁿai dāū-tai, (he said) to his father. In some cases this final nasal appears to represent an old neuter gender, as in apⁿnō dhan, his own wealth. The vowels ō and ū seem to be interchangeable. Thus the sign of the accusative-dative is kō or kū, and both bhūkhō and bhūkhū are used to mean 'by hunger.' Strong nouns in ā do not change in the oblique form, in this following Rājasthānī; thus, chhōrā-nē, by the son. Sometimes such nouns substantive end in au or ō, not ā. Thus, the list of words received from Bharatpur gives mhaurau, a mouth, and sōnō (another neuter form), gold. In one case, in the specimen, we have a strong adjective, chhōṭā, small, ending in ā in the nominative, with an oblique form in ē.

The past tense of the verb substantive is hau, as in Braj Bhākhā. The list of words gives an additional form, hatau or hatyau. Hatau is like the Bundēlī and Kanaujī hatō.

In the active verb, the definite present is made as in Rājasthānī by conjugating the simple present with the present of the verb substantive. This is sometimes found in the Braj of Muttra, but appears to be universal in Bharatpur. The tense is conjugated as follows:—

| Sing. | Plur. |
|---------------------|------------------|
| 1. mārū-hū | mārai-hai |
| 2. mārai-hai | mārau-hau |
| 3. mārai-hai | mārai-hai |

There are several examples in the specimen.

The only other peculiarity worth noting is the use of huō, instead of bhayau, he became.

¹ These examples are quoted from a list of words received from Bharatpur, but not here printed.

THE BROKEN DIALECTS OF THE DĀNGS.

The State of Karauli lies between the river Chambal and Jaipur. Its physical aspects are thus described in the Imperial Gazetteer :—

Hills and broken ground characterise almost the whole territory, which lies within a tract locally termed the 'Dang' being the name given to the rugged region which lies above the narrow valley of the Chambal. The principal hills in the State are on the northern border, where several ranges run along or parallel to the frontier line, forming formidable barriers, but there are no lofty peaks, the highest being less than 1,400 feet above sea-level Along the valley of the Chambal an irregular and lofty wall of rock separates the lands on the river bank from the uplands, of which the southern part of the State consists. From the summits of the passes fine views are often obtainable, the rocks standing out in striking contrast to the comparatively rich and undulating plain below, through which winds the glittering river. For some miles the country north of these passes is high, and too rocky to be deeply cut by ravines or to be pierced for water, and the few inhabitants depend upon tanks and dams, but further north the country falls, the alluvial deposit is deeper, level ground becomes more frequent, and hills stand out more markedly, while in the neighbourhood of the city of Karauli the low ground is cut into a labyrinth of ravines.

According to the Census of 1891, the population of Karauli was 156,587, divided thus according to language :—

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|----------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---------|
| Jādōbātī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 80,000 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | 156,587 |

Of these Urdū is spoken by the Pathāns and Muhammadans of the State, and by the educated portion of the urban population. In the plains country, which is mainly inhabited by Rajputs of the Yādava or Jādō tribe, the language spoken is the Jādōbātī form of Braj Bhākhā, and has been described ante (pp. 298 and ff.). The broken hill country, known as the Dāng, is the home of Dāngī. The Dāng, with its language, extends beyond the limits of Karauli State, to the north into Bayānā Tahsil of Bharatpur in the south of that State, and to the west into Jaipur. In the latter State, besides Dāngī proper, we find variations of it, called Dūgar-wārā, Kālīmāl, and Dāngbhāng, all spoken in the broken country bordering on Karauli. The people who speak Dāngī are mostly Gūjars.

The following are the figures for the various forms of Dāngī :—

For Dāngī proper, I propose to give specimens of that spoken in Karauli and Jaipur. The Dāngī of Bharatpur closely resembles that of Jaipur, showing, however, greater affinities with the Braj Bhākhā spoken immediately to its north, specimens of it are unnecessary. Of the other Jaipur dialects, I give specimens only of Dāngbhāng. The others are intermediate between it and Dāngī of Jaipur. I also give a List of Words and Phrases in the Dāngī of Karaulī and Jaipur, and in all the three other dialects of the latter State.

The examination of all the forms of speech current in Jaipur has been greatly facilitated by a book which will be frequently referred to in the following pages :—Specimens of the Dialects spoken in the State of Jeypore, prepared, at the instance of His Highness The Mahārājā, by the Rev. G. Macalister, M.A., in the year 1898. This admirable work gives a vocabulary, grammars, and specimens of all the dialects spoken in the State. It contains many details which cannot find place in the present Survey.

Dāngī exhibits Braj Bhākhā in the act of shading off into Rājasthānī. In the standard dialect of the south of the Braj tract we have, indeed, noticed the use of a form of the present definite (karũ-haũ instead of kar̥tu-haũ, I am doing) which is borrowed from that language, and in the centre of Bharatpur other examples of its influence have been pointed out, but in both these cases the instances are sporadic. In the Dāng dialects, on the other hand, they are quite common, and give a distinct colour to the whole. Dāngī, in short, shows the first signs of idioms which we shall meet more and more frequently as we go west, till they arrive at their fullest development in Gujarātī. In one notable instance (the impersonal use of the past tense of a transitive verb) we find the Gujarātī idiom already established in the Dāngī of Jaipur.

As in many rude languages, we find idioms preserved, which throw light on more abraded forms employed in more civilised speeches. For instance (as in old Gujarātī) Dāngī clearly forms a dative by putting the genitive into the locative case. Thus, mērō, of me, makes a locative mērai, which means 'to me.' This explains the origin of the Hindī suffix kō (Braj Bhākhā kaũ), which is really the locative of the genitive post-position kā (Braj Bhākhā kau).¹

We have noticed in the Braj Bhākhā of Aligarh and of the east of Agra a curious pronoun of the third person, gu or gwa. The corresponding form in Dāngī, wha or hwa, probably indicates the origin of this peculiar form. Wha is only another form of the familiar wah.

In Braj Bhākhā nouns form (amongst several methods) their oblique plural in n preceded by a short vowel. Thus, ghōṛā, a horse; ghōṛan-kau, of horses; nārī, a woman; nārīn-kau, of women. In Rājasthānī, these end in a nasalised long vowel. Thus, ghōṛā̃-kō, nāryā̃-kō. Dāngī occupies an intermediate position, and exhibits a form older than either, from which both are derived. The oblique plural ends in n, always preceded by a long vowel. Thus, ghōṛān-kō, of horses; nārīn-kō, of women; din or dan, a day; dinān-kō or danān-kō, of days.

In all the Western Hindī dialects, the past tense is simply the past participle of the verb without any suffix. We have seen that in Eastern Hindī and Bihārī (and other languages of the group) certain suffixes are added to the verb in all its tenses. Thus ¹ Kō is derived directly from an old form kaũ, which in its turn represents the Sanskrit kṛtā. Kṛtā (which in Sanskrit means 'for') is the locative of kṛtaḥ, which itself is the origin of the Hindī kā meaning 'of'.

(Eastern Hindī) mārya-s, he struck. This s-suffix is, as has been explained, the relic of an enclitic personal pronoun.

We shall see, in dealing with Jaipurī, that this very termination can also be added to words, but here it is recognised as a distinct enclitic word, not as verbal terminations, and can be added or not at will. Thus, gayō or gayō-s, he went (it will be noticed that the same peculiarity occurs in Banāpharī Bundēlī, vide post, p. 485).

This enclitic is common in Dāngī, as in bulāi-s, she was called.

In Western Hindī the sign of the Agent case is nē or nai. In Rājasthānī and Gujarātī this case takes no postposition, but nē or nai is used to indicate the Accusative-dative. In Dāngī nai is used (in the case of pronouns) for both the Agent and the Accusative-dative. In the first case it is used with the form of the nominative, and in the latter case with the oblique form. Thus, tañ-nai, by thee; tō-nai, or tō-kū, to thee. Here we see the postposition in the actual circumstances of the change of its meaning.

In Rājasthānī the conjunctive participle may be formed by adding ar to the root. Thus, mārar, having struck. In Western Hindī it is formed by adding the suffix kar, the letter i being optionally added at the same time to the root. Thus, mar-kar, or māri-kar. In Dāngī, it is formed by suffixing kar, or by adding ar or ir. Thus, mār-kar, mārar or mārir. Here we see the origin of the suffix ar. It is formed by the elision of the k of kar, and that this is the fact is proved by the form mārir, which is evidently a contraction of the form māri-kar. This, also, incidentally throws light on the Rājasthānī genitive in rō. The Mārwarī ghōṛā-rō is by parity of reasoning a contraction of ghōṛā-karō, just as the Bengali bālakēr, of a boy, is a contraction of bālaka-kēr.

Owing to the interesting character of these Dāng dialects, I have appended a special List of Words and Sentences, which illustrates their various forms.

DĀNGĪ OF KARAUĪ.

In the State of Karauli, Dāngī is reported to be spoken by 60,000 people. Here it is a rude Braj Bhākhā, with a strange vocabulary, and various infusions of Jaipurī. Two specimens are given,—a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a letter written in the locality, given just as it was put down, except that the formal salutation at the commencement has been omitted. The following are the principal divergencies from Standard Braj Bhākhā which should be noted.

Pronunciation.—The letter a often becomes i in an unaccented syllable, as in bālik, a child; sūrij, the sun. The letters ē and ai are apparently interchangeable. It is quite common to find the same word spelt with one or other indifferently. Thus, pītai or pīṭē, he beats. So ō and au are absolutely interchangeable. Thus, maūrā, mōrā, mōṛā, or even murā, a son. So chalyō or chalyau, he went. The letter h is sometimes inserted between two vowels, as in sūhar, swine. It is sometimes omitted, as in ran for rahan, to remain. When a vowel precedes a doubled consonant, it may be lengthened, and one consonant of the doublet omitted. Thus, ūtar for uttar, an answer. In the word khūp, well, an initial k has become kh. Instances of contraction are bhōt or bhaut, for bahut, much, and dōk for dō-ēk, one or two.

Strong nouns which in Braj Bhākhā end in ā, here usually end in au or ō. Thus, ghōrau, a horse. A few nouns of relationship, such as maūrā, a son, still end in ā. The oblique form singular of nouns in au (ō), usually ends in ē, as in ghorē-kau, of a horse. The Rājasthānī form in ā is, however, also common. Thus, from baiyō, baiyā-kū, to the mother. Note that this word ends in ō, although it is feminine. The Nominative Plural usually takes the form ghōrē, but occasionally we have ghōrā. The oblique plural usually takes the form ghōrān. The long vowel in the last syllable of the oblique plural is typical of Dāngī. Sometimes we have ēn instead of ān, as in jēg^rrēn-kē, to the calves, nom. sing. jēg^rrō. Nouns like maūrā have obl. sing. and nom. plur. maūrā, and obl. plur. maūrān. Nouns ending in consonants have a nom. plur. in ā, as in din, a day, dinā, days; purikh, a father, plur. purikhā. The oblique plural ends in an, ēn, or ān, as in dinan or dinēn, janēn (jan, a person), and purikhān. Nouns in i and ū preserve the long vowel in the oblique plural. Thus, mehⁿnatī, a servant, has mehⁿnatīn: and paṛūrā, a buffalo calf, has paṛūrān.

The case suffixes are the same as in Braj, but there are also some irregular forms. Thus, for the accusative-dative, besides kaū, kē, and kū, we have nē (properly belonging to the case of the agent). Thus, win rupaiyān-nē lai-lai, take those rupees. The suffixes of the instrumental-ablative are sū, sē, sō, with the usual variations, but very common is pai-sē, as in wā-pai-sē lai-lai, take from him. We have even pai (properly belonging to the locative) used alone as an ablative in sentences such as mō-pai digyau nānē jāt, it is not gone by me, I cannot go.

Besides the two ordinary genders, masculine and feminine, there are distinct traces of a neuter, which is indicated by the nasalisation of a final au or ō. Thus, pānyaū sūkhi-gayō, the water has dried up; sūkhā-kāl paryō, a famine fell; bichāryō, it was considered (by him), he considered; apⁿnō pēt, his own belly.

The pronoun of the first person is hū, hō, mē, or mai. The genitives plural of the first and second persons are (1) hamārau or hamⁿrau, (2) tumārau, tumⁿrau, or tiyārau.

The oblique forms plural are haman and tuman, respectively. The genitive of āp, self, is apⁿnau or āp-kau. As pronominal adverbs note jhā, here; jab, at this time, as well as 'when'; bhā there.

The verbal irregularities are few in number. There is a negative verb substantive. The only form noted is nānē, which means both 'I am not' and 'he is not.' We have already noted nānē, I am not, in Sikarwārī Braj Bhākhā.

As in Bhadaurī Bundelī, the initial h of the verb substantive is often dropped when the verb is used as an auxiliary. Sometimes y is inserted. Thus we have, rōpat-ē, he sets up; jāt-yē, he goes; dēt-ō, he was giving; charat-ē, they were grazing. The full form is also used, as in ḍōlat-hai, he is walking about.

The definite present generally prefers the Rājasthānī principle of conjugating the auxiliary with the simple present, instead of with the present participle.

The past participle nearly always ends in yau. Sometimes the y is omitted. We have both chukyan and chukau, he finished.

Precative forms of the imperative are aīyō, come; dhō-ghālījan, give; lījan, take, and dījan, give.

The following is a list of unusual words which occur in the specimens. Verbs are quoted under their root forms:—

- ātyau*, weary.
- ārā*, a wall-niche.
- ōjhyū* or aujhū, again.
- kaṭṭhān*, a buffalo.
- kūkas*, a husk.
- khīrak*, a cattle-pen.
- ghur*, to fight.
- chalū*, durable.
- chhaṭṭā*, good, handsome.
- jēg^rrō*, a calf.
- ṭarak-dē*, to walk away.
- ṭārā-ṭūrī*, evasion.
- ṭhāṭh^rrō*, dry stalks of bajrā.
- ḍig*, to walk.
- ḍōl*, to wander about.
- ḍhūk-lē*, to see.
- dājū*, a father.
- dhō-ghāl* or dhō-dē, to give.
- nākh*, to leave behind. In Jaipur this means 'to vomit.'
- nyār-phūs*, straw and chaff, fodder.
- pānyaū*, water.
- phīṭak*, in wāy phīṭak sūjhī, he came to his senses.
- phūs*, chaff.
- baiyō*, a mother.
- hai^rābānī*, a woman, a wife.
- bhāy^rlō*, a friend.
- bhiā*, a brother.

bhūs, to bark (like a dog).

malūk, handsome, good.

muk^atau, much.

meh^anatī, or mehantī, a servant.

rāhau, a stove.

lāgan, enmity.

lār, to throw food before cattle, to tend them.

lōṭhā, grown up.

lōhyau, blood.

hal, to move (intransitive).

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I am weary with writing to you this long time, that there is no food for the cattle in this jungle. The very water in the streams has dried up. When I tell your son to give the buffaloes bajrā stalks he shirks the work. The boy is now grown up, but still he won't understand anything. Look here, brother, your son won't even go to feed the calves. I rail and bark at him till I am tired, and the only result is that he hates me more and more every day. Now I won't stay in this house any longer. He goes about seeking whom he can fight with. No matter how much I reason with him, he won't give me an answer. A number of people have reasoned with him, but he just walks away from them. You did not let even my mother stay here, and so my wife has to feed the buffalo-calves when she goes out from the hut to the cattle pen. I am quite unable to get about myself. Now, brother, through these goings-on my blood is fairly drying up. Please come here yourself. I have already (before) written to ask you this. Now I don't know anything. From this letter you can understand the state of affairs. I am weary watching the road for your coming. If you don't, I leave this in a few days and go to you.

Let the corn stay in the granary. We'll want a great deal. You may give two maunds of corn to Jhaṇḍū. I have been ill with diarrhoea, but have been better for the last day or two. Tell my friend Nanūā that I have left three rupees in the wall-niche behind the stove. I want him to buy with them a handsome, durable shirt, and a pair of shoes, and a good comb, and to make them over to my mother. She will come here and see me. Dated 7th of the bright half of Baisākh, Sam. 1956.

ḌĀNGĪ OF JAIPUR.

The Ḍāngī proper of Jaipur is spoken in the north-west corner of the state on the borders of Bharatpur and Karauli. It is continuous with the Ḍāngī of the former state. To the west of the Ḍāngī proper, along the southern border of Alwar, there is a mixed dialect, through which Ḍāngī shades off into Jaipurī. It may also be included under the head of Ḍāngī. The number of speakers is reported to be as follows :—

| | | | | | | | | |
|---------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---------|
| Ḍāngī proper | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 186,905 |
| Mixed dialect | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 217,531 |
| | | | | | | | | 404,436 |
| TOTAL | | | | | | | | 404,436 |

As in the case of the other Jaipur dialects I am indebted to the Rev. G. Macalister for the two excellent specimens of Ḍāngī proper which follow. The grammatical sketch of the main peculiarities of the dialect is based on his grammar, and on the specimens.

Pronunciation.—Like all the Jaipur dialects Ḍāngī shows a marked preference for the cerebral n (which is strongly pronounced) over the dental n which we meet in Braj. In fact we may say that every n which represents a medial single n in Prakrit is cerebral: while only the few that represent a double nn in Prakrit are dental. Thus, the n in janū, a man, has a cerebral n, because in Prakrit the word is janō, but sōnū, gold, has a dental n, because the corresponding Prakrit word is soṇṇō or sonnō, with a double nn. Mr. Macalister states that a medial l is also pronounced as a cerebral, and it is probable that the same rule applies in this case also. The cerebral ḷ (𑂔) is not written in the specimens, so I do not mark it in the transliteration.

There is a tendency to disaspiration in the middle or at the end of a word. Thus, we have bhūkan for bhūkhan, by hunger; kaī for kahī, said; hāt for hāth, a hand; chār for charh, mount.

The letter ch sometimes becomes s, as in sōsī for sōchī, he thought.

Mr. Macalister always transliterates a final y preceded by a long vowel as ya, thus, wāya, to him; jāya, he goes; khōya, having lost.

As an instance of contraction we may quote lhōrō for lahuro, small.

When the letter a falls in an unaccented syllable, it is liable to be changed to i. Thus, bālik, for bālak, a boy; pōkhir, for pōkhar, a tank. So u becomes a in ṭhākar for ṭhākur.

Nouns, adjectives, and participles, which in Braj Bhākhā end in au, in this dialect end in ō. Thus, jēwarō, a rope; bhalō, good. The y is preserved in the past participle, as in chalyō (Braj Bhākhā, chalyau), not chalō, he went.

Nouns are declined much as in the Ḍāngī of Karauli. There is the same typical retention of the long vowel in the oblique form plural.

As a rule strong masculine nouns (as distinct from adjectives and participles) end in ā, not ō. The termination ō is Jaipurī and is occasionally met with. Now and then we meet ū, thus, sōnū, gold; janū, a person. Of nouns of this class, the oblique singular as well as the nominative plural ends either in ē, as in Braj Bhākhā, or in ā, as in Jaipurī. Nouns in ā have only the form in ā. Thus, potā, a grandson; accusative pōtā-kū, nom. plur. pōtā; ghōrā, a horse or horses. The other nouns seem to prefer ē. Thus, from rah^{bē}-wālō (or -wārō), a dweller, we have as genitive rah^{bē}-wālē-kō, and from janū, oblique janē. The oblique plural of all these nouns ends in ān or ēn, as in pōtān-kū or pōtēn-kū, to grandsons.

Masculine nouns ending in a consonant have a nominative plural in ā, as in dinā, days. The oblique plural ends in ān, as dinān. Sometimes we have the Braj Bhākhā termination an, as in nōk^{ran}-kō, of servants.

Feminine nouns in ī, such as chhōrī, a girl, have obl. sing. and nom. plur. chhōrī, and obl. plur. chhōrīn.

The case suffixes are the following:—

|-------------|--|
| Agent. | nē |
| Acc.-dat. | kū , kē , kai |
| Obl.-instr. | tē , tē , taī , pai-tē , pai-tē , kai-tē |
| Gen. | kō , obl. masc. kē ; fem. kī . |
| Loc. | mē , in; pai , māū , on. |

The oblique masculine of the genitive is sometimes (as in Jaipurī) kā, as in ū dēs-kā ēk rah^{bē}-wālē-kē dhīgārē, near an inhabitant of that country.

The accusative-dative sometimes takes the termination ya, as in pōtāya, to a grandson. There is also, as usual, an instrumental in an, as in bhākan, by hunger.

There are traces of a neuter gender. Thus, sunyā, it was heard, he heard. Strong adjectives which in Braj Bhākhā end in an, in this dialect end in ō, with an oblique masculine in ā or ē. Thus, bhalō, good, oblique bhalā, bhalē.

As regards Pronouns, that of the second person has its plural (nominative and oblique) tam, not tum, and a genitive plural tum^{rō} or tyārō. 'He,' 'that,' is ū. wā or wha; obl. sing. wā; nom. plur. wē, obl. plur. un. An optional form of the acc.-dat. sing. is wāya.

'This' is yā or ī; sing. obl. yā; acc.-dat. yāua; plur. nom. yē; obl. in.

Another word for 'that' is jē; sing. obl. jā; acc.-dat. jāya; plur. nom. jē; obl. jīn. So also jab, 'then,' as well as 'when.'

The Relative pronoun is jē, declined exactly like jē, that.

Kōn is 'who?' kā, 'what?' and kachhū, anything. Hence, Ḍāngī is also called Kā-kachhū-kī bōlī. Kān or kōn is any. None of these change their bases in declension.

The genitive of āp, self, is āp-kō or āp^{nō}. The word is sometimes (as in Jaipurī) used to mean 'we.' Quite frequently, the personal pronouns mērō, wā-kō, etc., are used where, according to the rules of Braj Bhākhā, we should expect āp^{nō}.

The Verb Substantive is the same as in Braj Bhākhā, except that one of the forms of the past is hattyō instead of hutan. Hattyō is also used as the present participle of haiḃō, to become. Other forms of this latter verb are 1 pres., hōū; 1 fut., hūgō; past, hūyō; conjunctive participle hai (not hwaī), hair, etc.

The conjugation of the Active Verb is on the whole the same as in Braj Bhākhā. The definite present follows the Rājasthānī principle of conjugating the auxiliary verb with the simple present tense, and not with the present participle. The present participle seems to be sometimes used as a past tense, as in khāḍātō, he sent (him to the fields); dētō, (no one) gave.

The form of the conjunctive participle is borrowed from Jaipurī, and is noteworthy. Its typical sign is the letter r, as in bōlar, bōlar-kaĩ, bōlar-kaĩn, or bōlar-kain, having said. Sometimes the termination is ir instead of ar, as in uṭhir or uṭhar, having arisen. The termination ar is often written as a separate word and is hence liable to confusion with the word ar, and Thus, chārar, having mounted, is written both चंडर and चंड अर.

There are also traces of the Braj Bhākhā conjunctive participle in i (or y), as in jāya, having gone; khōya, having lost; kai (i.e. kahi), having said. Care should be taken not to confound kai, having said, with kai, that (conjunction). The matter is further complicated by kai being also used for kahi, (he or she) said.

This conjunctive participle in i or y is often compounded with the verb ābō, to come, the two members being written as one word. Thus, कयाऊँ, kary-āũ, having done I come, I will come back after doing it. So जीयायो, jīy-āyō, having lived he came, he came to life.

Kar^abō, to do, is regular, its past being karyō; dēbō, to give, and lēbō, to take, make diyō and liyō (also dīyō and līyō) respectively. 'Gone' is gayō.

For further particulars and for a number of excellent specimens, the reader is referred to Mr. Macalister's work.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was a Thākūr who had nothing to eat in his house, so he said to himself, 'brother, I'm going to look for service.' There was also a bird of omen, and the Thākūr went to her to get an omen, but though he went every day she never gave him one. One day she went out to pick up some food, and before she started she told her children on no account to give an omen to any one. While she was away the Thākur came as usual, and the chicks gave him the looked-for indication, so he saddled his camel, mounted and set off.

Back came the omen-bird, 'My children, are you sure you gave no one an omen?' 'Indeed we did, mother. We gave it to the Thākur who comes every day.'

Up flew the omen-bird, and overtook the Thākur on his way. She assumed the form of a woman. 'Who are you?' said he. 'I'm your wife.' 'Come along; one has become two.' So he took her up on his camel. They came to a tank full of water, and he was compelled to descend for a certain purpose. 'I'll be back in a moment,' said he. 'All right,' said she. On the bank of the tank he saw a snake pursuing a frog. 'It's a shame to let the poor thing be killed,' said he. So he took out his penknife and cut bits of flesh out of his thigh with which he fed the snake till it could eat no more. Then he got up and went back to the camel. His thigh was all bloody. 'What's happened?' said the omen-bird. 'A snake was going to eat a frog, so I threw it lumps of flesh from my thigh instead.'

Straightway the omen-bird passed her hand over the wound, and it healed up as it was before. Then they got up on the camel and went on their way.

But the frog said to himself, 'some day or other you may be of use to him. Go at once.' So he started off at once.

[This is the end of the extract. The entire story, which is a long one, will be found on pp. 82 and ff. of Mr. Macalister's book. The frog takes the form of a barber and overtakes the Thākur. The three then go on. The snake, out of gratitude for his good meal, also joins the company as a Brāhman. The four settle in a city, where the omen-bird gets the Thākur service under the king, on a salary of a lākh of rupees. The king's barber persuades the king to set the Thākur three apparently impossible tasks (to get a snake's jewel, to find a ring thrown into a well, and to get news of his dead and gone ancestors), all of which the Thākur performs with the aid of the snake, the frog, and the omen-bird. To carry out the third task, the omen-bird assumes the form of the Thākur and gets the king to make a huge funeral pyre on which she sits. It is lighted, and she flies away in the smoke. She then sends the Thākur to the king with the news that he has come back from the king's ancestors, and that they are all well, but want a barber. So the king makes another pyre and sets his barber on it to go off to his ancestors. The pyre is lighted. The barber is, of course, burnt to death, and the king and the Thākur live happy ever afterwards.]

DĀNGBHĀNG.

In the south-east corner of the Jaipur State, on the borders of Kotah and Karauli, and separated from Dāngī by Kālimāl and the Dāngī of Karauli we have Dāngbhāng.

The estimated number of its speakers is 80,363.

Dāngbhāng is more infected with Jaipurī idioms than Dāngī. It even exhibits modes of expression which have hitherto been considered to be peculiar to Gujarātī. In its grammatical forms the following are the main points in which it differs from Dāngī of Jaipur.

Pronunciation.—There is a tendency for i to become a, as in dan, a day; lakhyō, written. So u becomes i in ripyō, a rupee.

The tendency to disaspiration appears to be stronger even than in Dāngī. We have cases like kusī, pleasure; bāḍō, bind; sūkō, dry; sād (sādhu), a saint; bhūkō, hungry; jīb, a tongue; lō, iron; rākas (rākhas), a fiend. The letter h is often transferred to the first letter of a word, as in mhal for mahal, a palace; mhārāj, as well as māhārāj, a great king; ghadō, for gad'hō, an ass. Similarly m is transferred in lmabō, for lambō, long. Disaspiration is, as usual, prominent in the conjugation of the roots rah, remain, and kah, say. We have rai-hai for rahai-hai, he lives; rayō, lived; kaī, said; kai, say (imperative, 2nd sing.); and kūgō, I will say.

As a rule strong masculine nouns end in ō,—not ā, as in Dāngī and Braj Bhākhā,—thus, bēṭō, not bēṭā, a son. The oblique singular of these nouns, and the nominative plural, end in ā. Thus, bēṭā-kō, of a son; bēṭā, sons. The oblique plural ends in ān, as in Dāngī. In other respects nouns form their oblique forms as in Dāngī.

There is no accusative-dative in ya, like the pōtāya of Dāngī. There is a locative in ā, as in mhalā, in the palace; sāchyā, in truth; and in ai for nouns and adjectives ending in ō, as in mahīnai, in a month; āgai, in front, before. This last locative is common, and when an adjective (or genitive) agrees with a noun in the locative, it too is put into that case, which is a most interesting survival. Thus we have āp-kai (not āp-kē) mhalā, in his own palace; mērai (not mērē) āgai, in my front, i.e. before me; tumārai pachhai, in thy behind, behind thee.

The postpositions are the same as in Dāngī, except that the agent has nai, instead of nē, and that the oblique genitive ends in kā, not kē, as in ū dēs-kā raibālā-kai, to an inhabitant of that country.

The termination kai of the dative (which also occurs in Dāngī) is here clearly seen to be the locative case of kō, the sign of the genitive. In other words, in Dāngbhāng, a dative may be formed by putting the genitive into the locative, i.e. by changing the termination ō to ai. Thus, raibālā-kai, to an inhabitant; chāy'nā hai mērai, there is a desire to me, I have a desire; dō putr hō-jyāy'gā tērai, two sons will become to thee, thou wilt have two sons; bēṭā hōya āp'nai, sons will be to us, we (i.e. I) shall have sons.

When an adjective or pronoun agrees with a noun, the postposition is sometimes added to both, as in ū-nai rājā-nai kai, by that by the king it was said, it was said by that king; raibālā-kai ēk-kai, to inhabitant to one, to one (i.e. an) inhabitant.

Sometimes the sign of the agent is omitted (as in Jaipurī), as in ū (for ū-nai) maī'rī-kū māri, he beat the sweeper-woman.

Adjectives which in Braj Bhākhā end in au, and in Dāngī in ō, often end in yō in Dāngbhāṅg. Thus, āchhyō, good (obl. sing. masc. āchhyā); sāchhyō, true (fem. sāchī, loc. sing. masc. sāchyā); asyō, of this kind (=Hindōstānī aisā). It will thus be seen that they agree in form with past participles.

As to pronouns, the first person is the same as in Dāngī, except that we now and then meet a Jaipurī form, such as mhārō, as well as mērō, my. The accusative-datives mōya, tōya, wāya, etc., do not occur.

The nominative plural of the second person is tum, tam or tamū, and its genitive is tumārō. This pronoun takes nai, the sign of the agent case, also as the sign of the accusative-dative (in this case suffixed to the oblique form), and not to the nominative). Thus, taī-nai, by thee; tō-nai, to thee; tum-nai, by you or to you.

As in Dāngī, the reflexive pronoun āpā, self, is also used to mean 'we,' including the person addressed, or even 'I.' Its oblique form is āpā, or (plural) āpān. Its genitive is āp^anō or āp-kō. The personal pronouns are often used instead of āp^anō, in the sense of 'own.' Thus, ū-kā (or āp^anā) bāp-sū kaī, he said to his father.

The pronoun of the third person ('he,' 'that') is wō; obl. sing. ū; nom. plur. wē; obl. plur. un: whā = 'there.'

'This' is yō (sometimes yā); obl. sing. ī; nom. plur. yē; obl. plur. in: nyā = 'here'; nyō = thus.

Jō, obl. sing. jī, nom. plur. jē, obl. plur. jīn, is the demonstrative pronoun 'that,' and the relative pronoun 'who'; jad or jab = 'then,' 'when'; jhyā = 'there,' 'where.'

Kun (which does not change in declension) is 'who?'; kāī = 'what?'; kōī = 'anyone,' 'some'; kāī = 'anything'; khā = 'where?'; kyō = 'why?'

The conjugation of verbs is generally as in Dāngī, except that (as in Jaipurī) the first person plural ends in ā, and the third person plural is not nasalised. Thus,—

I strike, etc.

| Sing | Plur. |
|-----------------|----------------|
| 1. mārū | mārā . |
| 2. mārai | mārō . |
| 3. mārai | mārai . |

The conjunctive participle ends in kai, kar or ar, as mār-kai, mār-kar, mār-ar; having struck. The noun of agency ends in bālō, as in rai-bālō, an inhabitant.

The auxiliary verb uses both the Braj and the Jaipurī forms. Thus—(Braj) maī hū, I am; maī hō (plur. masc. hā), I was.

(Jaipurī) maī chhū, I am; maī chhō (plur. masc. chhā), I was. The Braj form is the more usual.

The definite present is formed by adding the auxiliary verb to the simple present. Thus, maī mārū-hū. The imperfect is formed by adding ai to the root which is conjugated with the past tense of the auxiliary. Thus (singular) maī mārai hō, (plural) ham mārai hā, and so for all persons.

The letters s and k are often added pleonastically to the third person of verbs. They are relics of old pronouns. Thus, kaī-as, he said; pūchhī-s, he asked; mārai-k, he may strike.

In one important point of construction Dāngbhāṅg agrees with most of the Rājasthānī dialects, and with Gujarātī. When a transitive verb occurs in Hindī in the past tense, it is used either passively, or impersonally. Thus (passively) us-nē strī mārī, a woman was struck by him, i.e. he struck a woman, in which the verb (mārī) agrees in gender with the object (strī): (impersonally) us-nē strī-kō mārā, by him, with reference to the woman, striking was done, in which the verb (mārā), being used impersonally, always remains masculine whatever the gender of the object may be.

In Dāṅgbhāṅg, as in Gujarātī, when this impersonal construction is used, the verb is attracted by the gender of the object, and becomes feminine when it is feminine. Thus, rājā-nai mait^{rī}-kū bulāi, literally, by the king, with reference to the female-sweeper, she (not 'it') was called, i.e. the king called the female-sweeper. Here, it will be observed, the word bulāi agrees in gender with mait^{rī}, although the latter has the sign of the dative, kū, attached to it.

We may also note the employment of the Jaipurī word kōnī or kū nī, meaning 'not.'

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a king who had no sons. One day he was washing his hands and face when the Dame of the Broom¹ came to sweep up the place. Directly she saw the king she hid her face behind her basket. Said the king, 'Here am I monarch and lord of all. Why did the Mihtarānī hide her face with a basket directly she saw me?' So he called her to him and asked her saying, 'Here am I monarch and lord of all, why did you hide your face behind a basket?' Said she, 'Your Majesty, there was no particular reason for me to do it. I just put the basket before my face, because it struck me to do so.' Said the king, 'tell the truth.' Then she replied, 'Your Majesty, the Mihtar, my husband, will give me a drubbing. For you have no son, and it is not right that I should see your face.' Then the king told his servants to go and see if really and truly the Mihtar would beat her or not. So they went and saw that, as a matter of fact, she was beaten; and they returned to the king and told him that she had got the drubbing she expected.

So the king thought to himself that he must do homage to saints and holy men. And whenever a saint or a holy man came to his kingdom he did homage to him, and every day occupied himself in virtuous and charitable deeds. For he thought to himself how nice it would be to have a son, and that he must do all he could to get one. Now his garden was all dry and withered up, and one day a saint who alighted in it was so very holy that it immediately all over became fresh and green. The king did homage to him. 'This is a worker of miracles,' said he to himself, 'and will certainly give me a son.' The saint was pleased at his devotion and said to him, 'my child, ask a boon.' 'Promise to grant it,' said the king, 'and I will ask it.' 'The promise is given. Ask.' 'Holy sir, I long for a son.' 'Sons are not written in your fate. But nevertheless depart in peace, for two sons will be born to you.' The saint was a wanderer, and went his way, and the king returned to his palace. On the ninth month the sons were born, and he was happy, for now his family was established.

KĀLĪMĀL.

Kālimāl is spoken in Jaipur State immediately to the south of Ḍāngī, between it and Ḍāngbhāṅg, on the borders of the Karauli State. It is spoken by 81,216 people.

It closely resembles Ḍāngbhāṅg. Nouns and adjectives in ō have their oblique forms both in ā and ē. 'My' is mhārō and mērō; 'thy,' thārō and tērō; 'your,' tamārō; 'this,' yā; 'he,' 'that,' wā or ũ (obl. plur. ũn); 'who?' kaũṇ. Verbs form their first persons plural as in Ḍāngbhāṅg, and their third persons plural as in Ḍāngī.

Samples of Kālimāl will be found in the List of Words. It is quite unnecessary to give further specimens. A grammar and specimens of the dialect will be found in Mr. Macalister's book.

DŪGAR-WĀṚĀ.

In Jaipur the word dūgar means 'a hill,' and hence Dūgar-wāṛā means the language of the hill country. It is spoken by 108,766 people, south-west of Dāngī, and immediately to the north-west of Kālīmāl. It only differs from the latter dialect in being more strongly infected with Jaipurī. In fact it could with equal propriety be classed as a form of that language. The main points in which it differs from Kālīmāl are that it is fond of using the suffix of kai-tāṛ to represent the dative case; 'your' is thamārō; and 'who?' is kuṇ. In the verb substantive it prefers the Jaipurī forms chhū (present) and chhō (past) to hū and hō, and the verb is conjugated in the plural sometimes like Dāngī, and sometimes like Jaipurī.

As in the case of Kālīmāl, this dialect is sufficiently illustrated for present purposes by the List of Words appended. Further specimens and a full grammar will be found in Mr. Macalister's work.

KANAUJĪ.

The town of Kanauj is situated at the south-east end of the Farukhabad district, and the language of that locality may be considered to be the standard form of Kanaujī. It is that illustrated by the preceding skeleton Grammar.

It has hitherto been wrongly considered that at the north-western end of Farukhabad the language was Braj-Bhākhā or Antarbēdī. This is wrong. Kanaujī is, as will be shown, spoken all over the district. The total number of speakers of Kanaujī in Farukhabad is 712,500. The local authorities divided this into—

|---------------------|---------|
| Antarbēdī | 678,900 |
| 'Hindī' | 33,600 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 712,500 |

Both are, however, Kanaujī.

In the north-western portions of Farukhabad, the language is also Kanaujī,—not Antarbēdī or Braj Bhākhā as has been hitherto supposed. This will be evident from the following specimen, which is the first few lines of the Parable. The language is identical with that of the corresponding portion of the preceding specimen.

KANAUJĪ (PACHARUĀ) OF ETAWAH.

The language spoken over the greater part of the district of Etawah is Kanaujī. Only in the south, in the Dōāb of the Chambal and the Jamna, do we hear the Bhadaurī dialect of Bundēlī. To the north-west of Etawah lies the district of Mainpurī, the language of which is Braj Bhākhā or Antarbēdī. To its north lies Farukhabad and to its east Cawnpore, in both of which Kanaujī is spoken. As might be expected the Kanaujī of Etawah shows traces of the influence of Braj Bhākhā and of Bhadaurī, but on the whole, it is fairly pure.

In the original Rough List of the languages of this district, what is now stated to be Kanaujī, was wrongly shown as Antarbēdī. That it is Kanaujī will not be doubted after a perusal of the specimens which follow.

The district of Etawah is divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Sengar, which runs north-west and south-east, parallel to the course of the Jamna. There are therefore (if we exclude the Chambal-Jamna Dōāb) two main tracts, a south-western, between the Sengar and the Jamna, and a north-eastern beyond the former river. The latter tract is locally known as the Pachār, and local officials distinguish between the Kanaujī of the Pachār, which they call Pacharuā, and that of the rest of the district. Pacharuā shows more traces of the influence of Braj Bhākhā, and less of that of Bhadaurī than does the Kanaujī of the unnamed south-western tract.

The following is the estimated number of speakers of these two forms of Kanaujī:—

|---------------------------------|---------|
| Pacharuā | 250,000 |
| Kanaujī of south-west | 101,000 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 351,000 |

In 1891, the total population of the district was 727,629, and the balance is mainly made up by 55,000 speakers of Bhadaurī and 285,000 people who are reported to speak Urdū. The latter figures appear to be a needlessly large estimate, but no better one is available. I proceed to give specimens of both forms of Kanaujī.

For Pacharuā, I give a few lines of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It will be seen that there are very few local peculiarities. We have kēṛ, kōṛ, and kaũ for the sign of the accusative-dative, and nē or naĩ (Bhadaurī) for the agent. The sign of the conjunctive participle is kēṛ, as we also find in Bhadaurī. We meet the form aĩ for hai, they were, which properly belongs to Braj Bhākhā. The third personal pronoun is bũ, with an oblique form wā or bā (again Bhadaurī). There is also the tendency to eliminate an r before another consonant which is a marked peculiarity of Bhadaurī. Thus khachchu for kharch, expenditure, and paddēs for parādēs, a foreign country. The form juā, there, is noteworthy.

KANAUJĪ OF SOUTH-WEST ETAWAH.

The dialect spoken in the south-west of Etawah hardly differs from that which prevails in the Pachār tract. The influence of Bhadaurī is felt a little more strongly, and that is all. To this we may attribute the use of bā (and not wā) for the oblique form of the third personal pronoun. To the same influence is due the use of bā (Bhadaurī bā) for the nominative as well as wah. We may also note the use of the Agent case for the subject of an intransitive verb in the past tense. In this case the verb is used impersonally. Thus ōchhē laṛkā-nē chalō, the younger son went, literally, by the younger son it was gone. This of course is altogether contrary to the rules of Standard Hindī, but is all the same quite common in this part of India. It is an instance of the preservation of a very old idiom. Compare the Sanskrit tēna chalitam.

KANAUJĪ OF HARDOI.

Crossing the Ganges from the district of Farukhabad we come to Hardoi, the only western district of Oudh of which the language is not Awadhī. Here it is everywhere Kanaujī. Local authorities recognise three or four sub-varieties, but the differences are merely as to the amount of Awadhī with which the Kanaujī is mixed.

The number of speakers of Kanaujī in Hardoi is estimated at 1,030,500. The district has to its east Unao and Lucknow, and to its north Sitapur and Kheri, in all of which the language is Awadhī. It is hence natural to expect a certain infusion of that form of speech in the local Kanaujī. This infusion varies from place to place, but is generally very slight in amount. Only in the extreme east of the district, in Tahsīl Sandila and the neighbourhood is the infusion so strong as to form a mixed dialect requiring separate treatment. We may estimate the number of speakers of each of the two forms of Kanaujī employed in Hardoi as follows:—

|---|-----------|-----------|
| Standard Kanaujī slightly mixed with Awadhī | | 880,500 |
| Mixed dialect of Sandila | | 150,000 |
| | TOTAL | 1,030,500 |

The mixed dialect of Sandila will not be considered here. It will be found dealt with, together with other mixed dialects, on p. 411 ff. At present I confine myself to the Kanaujī of the rest of the district. As a sample I give an abstract of the main story of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which illustrates the dialect of the centre and south of the district. This is locally known as Bangrahī from the name (Bangar) of one of the Parganas in which it is spoken. Illustration of the dialects of other parts of the district (except Sandila) is quite unnecessary.

We may trace the influence of Awadhī in the rare use of the typical Kanaujī termination u of weak masculine nouns; in the employment of tehi as the oblique form of sō, that; and in the locative par-dēsai (Awadhī par-dēsahi), in a foreign country.

Note also the way in which the letter i is added to a word ending in a consonant, as in khusāmadi, entreaty. This addition of i is common in the Kanaujī spoken north of the Ganges, and in Cawnpore.

KANAUJĪ OF SHAHJAHANPUR.

To the west of the districts of Hardoi and Kheri lies the district of Shahjahanpur in the province of Rohilkhand. It is commonly stated that this province has a dialect of its own. This is a mistake. The language of Eastern Rohilkhand is Kanaujī, and that of the west is the same as that of Meerut and Muzaffarnagar, or else Braj Bhākhā.

It will be seen from the following specimen that the dialect of Shahjahanpur is ordinary standard Kanaujī. There are hardly any local peculiarities. We may mention the forms kā, the sign of the accusative-dative ; nē, the sign of the agent ; and mā or mahiṃā, the sign of the locative, as local forms of the case suffixes. The use of ohi instead of uhi for 'him,' is probably due to the influence of the Awadhī of Kheri. We may also notice the tendency to add the vowel i to a word ending in a consonant, as in bādī, after ; dēti, giving, which is characteristic of north Gangetic Kanaujī, and of that of Cawnpore. Finally, note the way in which an intransitive verb can be used impersonally with the subject in the agent case, as in larikā-nē chālō, it was gone by the son ; i.e. the son went.

The specimen consists of the first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

KANAUJĪ OF PILIBHIT.

The District of Pilibhit, to the north of Shahjahanpur, was originally a portion of Bareilly. The dialect of the latter district is Braj Bhākhā. That of Pilibhit is Kanaui in the main, but with here and there a Braj inflexion. For instance while the Kanaui thō, was, is quite common, we have also the Braj kō. Thus, in a witness's deposition received from Pilibhit, we have baiyār-bānī sōat-hī, my women folk were sleeping, and again, a few sentences lower down, wā-nē mō-kō bulāō-thō, she had called me. With the exception of these few borrowed Braj expressions the language is the same as the Kanaui of Shahjahanpur, and it is unnecessary to give any specimen of it.

MIXED DIALECTS.

KANAUJĪ OF CAWNPORE.

The district of Cawnpore has Farukhabad and Etawah, of which the language is Kanaujī, to its north-west. To its east, across the Ganges, lies the district of Unao, in which Eastern Hindī is spoken. To its south-east, in the Doab between the Ganges and the Jamna we have Fatehpur, of which the language is also Eastern Hindī. To its south, across the Jamna, in order from east to west are Hamirpur and Jalaun, of both of which the dialect is Bundēlī. Being thus surrounded by three different dialects, we may naturally accept that the local form of speech is a mixed one, and so it is. It is everywhere based on Kanaujī, but is generally mixed with Eastern Hindī. Eastern Hindī prevails on both banks of the Jamna as far as the common boundary of Hamirpur and Jalaun. Here it is nowhere pure, and is known as Tirhārī, or the language of the River Bank. In Hamirpur it is infected with Bundēlī, but is still based on Eastern Hindī. In Fatehpur, to the south-east of Cawnpore, it also preserves its Eastern Hindī character, but in Cawnpore, the infusion of that language is weaker than elsewhere, and the Tirhārī is like the Kanaujī of the rest of the district, only more strongly infected with Eastern Hindī. I therefore do not class it under the latter language as has been done with the Tirhārī of Hamirpur, Banda, and Fatehpur, but consider it as a form of Kanaujī. The following are the estimated numbers of the speakers of Kanaujī and Tirhārī in Cawnpore :—

| | | | | | | | | |
|---------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|-----------|
| Kanaujī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 1,090,000 |
| Tirhārī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 40,000 |
| | | | | | | | | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | . | | | | | | | 1,130,000 |

The following specimen of the Kanaujī of Cawnpore is a folktale. I here give a brief sketch of the chief peculiarities of the dialect which differentiate it from Standard Kanaujī.

In pronunciation, we may note the way in which ē optionally becomes yā, e optionally becomes ya, ō optionally becomes wā, and o optionally becomes wa. Thus, we have ēku or yāku, one; jehi or jyahi, this (obl. form); tōrō or twārō, thy; and tohi or twahi, thee. These peculiarities also occur in Eastern Hindī.

Nouns are declined as in ordinary Kanaujī. The termination u of weak nouns, as ghar or gharu, a house, is very common. The sign of the accusative-dative is kō, kaiḥā or (Eastern Hindī) kā. Nitin is 'for.' The instrumental-ablative has sē, tē, or tē̃. The genitive has the standard Kanaujī kō (kē, kī), and also the Eastern Hindī forms kēr or kyār (not changing for form or gender), and kērō or kyārō (obl. -rē, fem. -rī). The locative has mē̃, mā̃, or (Eastern Hindī) mahā̃, in; par, pai, on; lō̃, up to.

The Pronouns are,—

1st person,—maĩ, I; mōrō, my; ham, hamu, or hamaĩ, we; ham^arō, or hamārō, our.

2nd person,—tū, thou; tōrō, thy; tum or tumh, you; tumh^arō or tumhārō, your.

3rd person,—wah, wuh, wahu (often written bahu), or wau (often written bau), he, that; obl. sing. wahi, wuhi, wohi, or ui; agent, wahĩ, wuhĩ, wohĩ, or uĩ; Nom. plur. wē, ui; obl. plur. un.

This,—i, yah (or jah), yahu (or jahu), or yau (or jau) ; obl. sing. i, yahi, jahi, or jyahi ; agent, yahĩ, jahĩ, or jyahĩ ; nom. plur. yē, jē ; obl. plur. in.

In all the above, especially in the first and second persons, the plural is commonly used for the singular.

The Relative pronoun is jaunu, etc., and the Interrogative kaunu, etc., as in standard Kanaujī. 'What' is kāhā, obl. kāhē.

The Verb is irregular in the first person plural, which may optionally end in anu. This seems to be a combination of the Eastern Hindī -an, with the favourite Kanaujī termination -u. The Verb substantive is thus conjugated :—

| PRESENT | | | PAST | |
|---------|------------|---------------------------|--------------|-------------------------------|
| | Sing | Plur | Sing. | Plur. |
| 1 | haũ | hanu or hai | rahaũ | rahanu or rahai |
| 2 | hai | hai | rahai | rahau |
| 3. | hai | hai | rahai | rahai . |

We sometimes find present forms borrowed from Eastern Hindī, such as ham āhinu (for ham āhen), we are.

For the past we have also the typical Kanaujī thō, and I have met one or two instances of forms like mai thō, I was. Rahĩ (plur. fem. of rahō) is used to mean 'she remained.'

In the Active Verb, the infinitive is māran, māranu, mārⁿnō, mārab, mārabu, or marⁿbō. The Present Participle is mārat, māratu, or mārⁿtō. In three or four instances I have met a masculine form māratī. Thus larikā āwati-hai, the boy is coming ; tū saugandh khāti-hai aurū tayai-kā bāpu banāwati-hai, thou art taking an oath and making only the devotee your father. Similar additions of i are found in other forms of Kanaujī used north of the Ganges. The Past Participle is mārō. The Conjunctive Participle is māri-kai.

The Present tense, 'I strike,' or 'I may strike' is—sing. māraũ, mārai, mārai ; plur. māranu or māraĩ, mārau, māraĩ. Mārat-haũ, etc., is also common.

The Future is marahaũ, marihai, marihai ; marihanu or marihai, marihau, marihai. Note that the first vowel is shortened, as in Eastern Hindī, owing to its falling in the penultimate. Here and there I have met instances of the Eastern Hindī future, of which the typical note is the letter b. Thus, ham maribē, I shall strike.

In other respects, the conjugation of the verb follows standard Kanaujī. Sometimes we meet stray Eastern Hindī forms, such as dinheni, he (or they) gave.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time the mighty Vikramāditya was king. He had a queen, and one day they had a dispute about a bird they heard singing. The king said it was a swan, and the queen said that she thought it was probably a crow. While they were discussing the matter, the bird flew off the tree on which it was sitting, and it turned out to be a crow after all. The king was so ashamed at being put in the wrong that he turned the queen out of doors, although she was two and a half months gone with child by him.

She walked on till she came to a hut known as 'the hut of Tayā¹, the devotee.' She went into it and shut the mat door on herself. In a short time the devotee came home and when he found the door shut he said, 'if there's a girl inside, she will be my daughter, and if there's a boy, he will be my son.' Then the queen answered from inside that she was so-and-so, and told him the tale of all her woes, and the devotee took her under his² protection as if she were a daughter.

In due course the queen had a son, who grew up and began to play with the other children of the neighbourhood. When he did anything wrong he used, like the other children, to take oath that he had not done it. Then the children would cuff him, and each time he used to swear by the devotee (as the other children swore by their fathers) that he had not done it. At last the children asked what was his father's name. He gave the name of the devotee. 'Away, foul one,³ you are swearing by the devotee, and making him out to be your father, while you are really his slave.' At this he was much ashamed, and asked his mother who his father was, and she told him that his father's name was Vikramāditya. So next day he swore by Vikramāditya, and, the children said to him, 'foul one, did you ever hear the name of Vikramāditya before, or have you learnt it just now?' At this he was again ashamed and he went to his mother and said, 'I'm going to my father,' and started off.

As he went along he came to his father's country, and found some women drawing water from a well. He asked them to give him to drink, and they said, 'yes, we will.' Then he asked them to give the water quickly, and they replied, 'if you are in such a hurry, you can jump into the well.' So he did jump in, and there he saw a very beautiful ogre's daughter sitting. Now this ogre could not stand the smell of a man if he was even twelve kōs off on this side, or twelve kōs off on that. So he said to his daughter, 'I smell the smell of a man.' But she turned the boy into a mosquito, and so concealed him. Then the ogre went out and the boy asked the damsel all the secrets by which he could devise some scheme for killing him. So he made his scheme and killed the ogre. Then he hauled the damsel out of the well and married her, and became known as the son of Vikramāditya.

This story is known as the 'Tale of the two and a half gems.'

¹ Tayā is said to be a local form of tapā, a devotee. It may possibly be a proper name.

² Wahi-kī rachchhā kīnheni, made protection of her.

³ Sasur, father-in-law, is a low term of abuse.

TIRHĀRĪ OF CAWNPORE.

As explained in the introduction to the preceding specimen, the Tirhārī of Cawnpore is spoken on the banks of the Jamna opposite the district of Hamirpur, by some 40,000 people. Its basis is Kanaujī, but it is much mixed with Eastern Hindī, and also with the form of Bundēlī spoken in East Hamirpur, which we may call Banāpharī.

A few sentences from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will show the nature of this dialect. The mixture of speech is purely mechanical. Thus, in one sentence we have the Kanaujī larikā, and in the next the Eastern Hindī larikā, a son. We have the Kanaujī kahō, said, and the Bundēlī dīnhōs, gave, līnhōs, took, ḍārōs, threw away. Paṭhaus, sent, is a contraction of the Bundēlī paṭhaōs. Other Eastern Hindī forms are oh, him ; moh, me ; and the oblique plurals janen, persons, kāmen, actions.

THE MIXED DIALECT OF EAST HARDOI.

The principal dialect of the district of Hardoi is Kanaujī slightly mixed with the Awadhī dialect of Eastern Hindī. Specimens of it will be found on pp. 395 ff. In the eastern portion of the district, i.e. in Tahsīl Sandila and the neighbourhood, which has on three of its sides the districts of Unao, Lucknow, and Sitapur, all of which are Awadhī speaking. The dialect is, it is true, based on Kanaujī, but is largely mixed with Awadhī. We may estimate that this form of speech is employed by, roughly speaking, 150,000 people.

As an example of this dialect, I give below an abstract of the main story of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and from this, and from some other materials, I have noted the following peculiarities. In the first place the termination of strong masculine nouns, adjectives, and participles is no longer ō, but is the Awadhī ā. Thus we have ghōrā, a horse, not ghōrō; ghōrē-kā, not ghōrē-kō, of a horse; katā (this is a Kanaujī form with an Awadhī termination), not katō, he was; gawā, gā, not gaō, he went; bhawā, bhā, not bhaō, he became.

In the conjugation of the past tense, we have both the Kanaujī principle of using the past participle alone (mārā, I, thou, he, she, it struck), or else the conjugated form peculiar to Awadhī. Thus, (masculine)—

| Sing | Plur. |
|-----------------|----------------|
| 1. māreũ | mārā |
| 2. māris | māreā . |
| 3. māris | mārin . |

The conjugation of the future in Awadhī differs only from that in Kanaujī in the third person singular. In the dialect under consideration the Awadhī custom is followed. Thus (I shall strike)—

| Sing | Plur. |
|--------------------------------------|------------------|
| 1. marikaũ | marikaĩ . |
| 2. marikai | marikau |
| 3. mārī (not marikai) | marikaĩ . |

In the specimens we may also note the following miscellaneous Awadhī forms,—kā, as the sign of the accusative-dative: dīnh, the past participle of dēnā, to give: the formation of a verbal noun in aĩ, as in kahaĩ lāg, he began to say.

We may also note the manner in which the letter i is added to words ending in a consonant, as in bādi, after; bar^abādi, ruined. This occurs elsewhere in Hardoi, and has also been pointed out in the case of present participles in Cawnpore.

The district of Jhansi is situated in the heart of Bundelkhand, and the dialect there spoken may be taken as the Standard form of Bundeli. Out of a total population of 683,619 (according to the Census of 1891) 679,700 have been reported as speaking it. I therefore give the two following specimens from that district,—one a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the other a folktale:—

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

The headman of a village, having seen a poor farmer's harvest standing by his sir land, said to him, 'how, fellow, is that you let loose your cattle in my field? Do you not happen to see that I keep watch on it?' The farmer replied, 'uncle headman, why, at daybreak the herdsman took away my cattle to the pasture.' On hearing this the headman said, 'yesterday your father went to court¹ to complain against me.' Replied the farmer, 'my father has been away from home for the last three months.' Then said the headman, 'it may have been your mother.' Answered the other, 'my mother died of sickness long ago, when I was a boy. I do not even remember her.' Then the headman fell upon him, kicked him three or four times, and gave him a pounding with his fists. After that, he artfully got the farmer's crop cut and grazed down by his cattle, and said to him, 'if you go to court¹ about this, I'll take care that you won't be able to stay in the village any longer.' So the farmer went home, and told his people all that had come to pass between him and the headman. Said they all with one voice, 'let us go to the court, and the magistrate will make everything all right. Otherwise it will be long before we shall be able to live at ease in the village.'

But the farmer, seeing that all this was only lip-courage, said, 'look here, brothers, it is not wise to live in water and to make an enemy of the crocodile. I have made up my mind not to till lands in this village any longer. I had rather earn my livelihood by some trade or other which will at least allow me to live at peace in my own hut.'

There were many people present there at the time, and when they heard what he said they became silent, until one of them replied, 'listen, brothers, there is no good in the weak and harmless facing those who are strong and wily. Forbear, therefore, and let us sit quietly at home.'

¹ This time it is the regular court, not the council of village elders.

BUNDĒLĪ OF JALAUN.

Immediately to the north of the district of Jhansi lies the district of Jalaun. The dialects spoken on the eastern border are Nibhaṭṭā (see p. 529) and Lodhāntī (see p. 465), but over the rest of the district the dialect is the same as that of Jhansi, slightly influenced by the Kanaujī spoken in Cawnpore. It is spoken by 360,129 people. It may be taken as practically pure Standard Bundēlī, although in the north of the district it is more affected by Kanaujī than in the south. To the west of the district it varies slightly.

The following specimen comes from Central Jalaun, and illustrates the form of Bundēlī spoken by the great mass of the Bundēlī-speaking population. The influence of Kanaujī is most evident in the pronunciation. This is not so broad as in Bundelkhand proper. The vowel ē is preferred to ai and ō to au. Thus we have ēsō instead of aisō, of this kind; pē for pai, on; jēhai for jaihai, he will go; ōr for aur, and; lōtan for lauṭan, to return; ōrat for aurat, a woman.

Vowels seem to be interchanged under the influence of a neighbouring h. We have sahir for sahar or shahr, a city; pih^hrān for pahirān, to clothe; kik^hhai for kah^hhai, he will say; buhut for bahut, much.

In nouns the oblique form in an is often used for the singular, as in dēran-pē, at the house. This is more common in Hamirpur immediately to the south-east. In the specimen, the Kanaujī form tumhē, to you, once occurs.

Note how commonly the past tense of the verb meaning 'to say' is put in the feminine (to agree with bāt understood) when used impersonally. Thus we have kahī, it was said. Very good instances of this idiom are jā kahī, he said this, lit. this was said. Here jā, the feminine of jō, this, agrees with bāt understood. So tis^rrē din-kī kahī for tis^rrē din-kī bāt kahī, the (word) of the third day was said, i.e. the third day was fixed.

The following are revised figures for the dialects spoken in Jalaun :—

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

The Saint Bābā Ghāsi-rām once asked his barber, Pūt-bulākī, to accompany him on a pilgrimage. The barber took counsel with his wife, and refused on the ground that he would lose the large income which he got from his other clients. The Saint replied that he would make good any loss on that account. Then the barber tried to get off by saying he would go on condition that the Saint promised to explain every circumstance which he might see on the way, and that if he ever failed to do so, he would immediately let him return. To this the Saint agreed.

At one place at which they stopped, the barber went to market to buy provisions, and saw nothing about which he could ask the holy man, till on the way home he noticed a postman going along, urged by a peon, who kept saying 'hasten, hasten.' So when he had come to their lodging, and both had finished their meal, he said to the Saint, 'Holy Sir, I have seen something which I wish you to explain.' 'What is it,' was the answer. Said the barber, 'I saw a postman going along, and a peon urging him, saying "hasten, hasten." What is the meaning of that?' The Saint said, 'I will tell you while you shampoo my feet. Now, listen. In this city there is a very beautiful merchant's wife, whose husband is away on a journey. One day she went on invitation to her own people, and on the way home was overtaken by a heavy storm of wind and rain. The consequence was that she mistook her road, and went into a Musalmān's house instead of her own. As soon as she discovered her mistake she was horrified and ran off to her own house. The Musalmān saw her, and wondered who she could be. So he made up his mind to find out, and followed her to her home. There he made enquiries, and found out that there was no man there. So he determined to make up some device by which he could get her into his own house. He went into the city and got hold of an innkeeper's lad, to whom he gave ten or twenty rupees, and instructed him as to how he should act. Then he dressed him in women's clothes and brought him to the court of the king in a palanquin. There the pretended woman put in a petition under the name of the merchant's wife to this effect, "I am tired of the merchant, and want to live with the Musalmān." The king said that it was not right that a Hindū should become a Musalmān, but when the pretended woman would not listen to his remonstrances, he told her to come to-morrow. The next day the lad put in a petition again, and the king told him to come again the next day. In the meantime the news came to the merchant's wife that a false petition had been put in in her name, so she has dispatched a postman to call her husband.'

The Saint continued, 'So much for what has occurred. I have told you what has happened. Now I shall tell you what is going to happen. To-morrow morning the merchant will come, and the petition in his wife's name will again be presented. At the same moment the merchant will arrive, and with folded hands will say, "Your Majesty, if this woman will tell me where she has stowed away my property, she may go her way." Then the false woman will have to get out of the palanquin, and the merchant will say, "Your Majesty, this is not my wife. Justice demands that you should enquire who she is." Then the king will enquire, and she will turn out to be the innkeeper's lad. Then the king will bury alive the Musalmān and the lad, and the merchant will go in peace to his own house.'

BUNDĒLĪ OF WEST JALAUN.

The following folktale comes from western Jalaun, and illustrates the patois of that portion of the district. Out of the 360,129 speakers of Standard Bundēlī in Jalaun, it is estimated that about 20,000 speak this patois. It was incorrectly entered as Bhadaurī in the original Rough List of the Jalaun dialects. It has nothing to do with that dialect, which is a mixturé of Bundēlī and Braj.

The principal distinction between the dialect of the west of Jalaun and that of the rest of the district is that the pronunciation is much broader. ai and au are preferred to ē and ō respectively. Thus, we have pai, not pē, on; kau as well as kō, of; kaũ as well as kō̃, the sign of the accusative-dative; hau, you are; chalan and gaau, he went; baiḥau, he sat; karau, he was made; barau, great. There is the same fluctuation of vowel sounds that we have noticed in Central Jalaun. Thus, sib, all; buhut, many; puhūchan, to arrive. In the pronouns, 'he, that,' is ba, not bō, and 'this' is ja, not jō. The oblique forms are bā and jā, as in the Standard Dialect. The plural of ja, who, is jāy.

The specimen is a folktale relating one of the wit-contests between the Emperor Akbar and his famous minister Birbal.

Once upon a time the Emperor Akbar and Birbal were seated together, and the Emperor asked Birbal what people had big bellies. Birbal replied that it depended on the size of the man. 'But,' said the Emperor, 'who has the biggest belly of all?' 'A landlord,' said Birbal. 'Tell me,' said the Emperor, 'why you say that a landlord has the biggest belly.' 'Very well, I shall tell,' and with these words Birbal went and hid himself in a village close by owned by some landlords. When he did not appear in court next day, the Emperor sent for him, but he could not be found. Then he had search made throughout his own kingdom, and other countries also, but without avail.

Then the Emperor got a lot of goats, and after having them weighed, had one sent to each village, owned by landlords, in his kingdom with this order, 'Feed this goat well for six months, but take care that it does not increase in weight. If its weight increases, I shall punish you severely.' All the landlords began to think of some device or other for carrying out His Majesty's behest, and those who owned the village in which Birbal was hidden came to him, and asked him what they were to do. 'Send,' said he, 'to the jungle and fetch a wolf. Tie it in front of the goat, to whom you must offer plenty of food. His fear of the wolf will prevent his eating, and he will pine away and won't increase in weight.' They followed his advice, and at the end of the six months all the goats were sent for by the Emperor and weighed in his presence. All the other goats had increased in weight, but the one brought by the landlords of the village in which Birbal was hidden was a quarter of a seer less than it was before. Then the Emperor felt sure that Birbal was hiding with them, and told them to produce him. They denied that he was with them, and, no matter how much the Emperor browbeat them, they stuck to their denial. Then he asked them how it was that their goat had become less in weight. 'Because,' said they, 'it was sick when it was sent to us.'

In the same way the Emperor tried several other tricks but failed to get a clue as to where Birbal was. Finally he offered a reward of one thousand rupees to whoever brought Birbal to him, and those very 'landlords did so. As Birbal approached the Emperor rose and embraced him, and asked him where he had been hidden. 'I searched in every land for you, but without result.' 'Sire,' replied Birbal, 'I have been the whole time in the house of one of these landlords, a couple of miles from this palace. See, now, how big is the belly of a landlord. These men kept me safely concealed, while Your Majesty searched out the whole country, and could not find me.' Then the Emperor replied, 'Birbal, you speak the truth. A landlord's belly is the biggest of all.' He then gave rich rewards to these landlords.

BUNDĒLĪ OF HAMIRPUR.

The language of the central portion of Hamirpur is the same as the standard Bundēlī of Jhansi. This will be evident from a perusal of the first few lines of a local version of the Parable which are given below. We may note the form mau-kā̃, to me, which in Jhansi would be mō-khō̃. The change of mō to mau is merely a matter of spelling as explained in the introduction to the dialect. The kā̃ instead of khō̃ is due to the influence of the corrupt Awadhī spoken immediately to the East. So is mōrō instead of mērō.

The dialects spoken in Hamirpur are as follows :—

|----------------------------|---------|
| Standard Bundēlī spoken by | 384,000 |
| Lodhānti | 98,000 |
| Kuṇḍrī | 11,000 |
| Banāpharī | 5,000 |
| Tīrhārī | 3,000 |
| Hindōstānī | 12,000 |
| Other languages | 720 |
| | <hr/> |
| | 513,720 |

Of these Banāpharī and Tīrhārī are (in this district) not forms of Bundēlī, but are based on Eastern Hindī mixed with Bundēlī forms. They have been already dealt with under the head of Eastern Hindī (see Vol. VI, pp. 140, 142, and 146). Kuṇḍrī is spoken both in Hamirpur and Banda, on the banks of the Ken, which forms the boundary between the two districts. On the Banda side it is Eastern Hindī mixed with Bundēlī, and has been described under the former language (Vol. VI, pp. 152 ff.). The Kuṇḍrī of Hamirpur is described below on pp. 527 ff. as it has a Bundēlī basis, though mixed with Eastern Hindī.

BUNDĒLĪ OF EAST GWALIOR.

To the west of the District of Jhansi lies the Gwalior Agency of Central India. Along the northern half of the border it is separated from that Agency by the State of Datia which belongs to the Bundelkhand Agency, but towards the south, in what formed the old District of Lalitpur, it marches directly with the Gwalior State.

The Gwalior Agency now includes the old Guna Agency, which lies to its south. We may say, as a broad statement that the main language of the original Gwalior Agency (excluding the old Guna Agency) is the mixed form of Bundēlī known as Bhadaurī, to be described later on, and that of the old Guna Agency is the Mālwi dialect of Rājasthānī. The old Gwalior Agency principally consists of what may be called the home districts of the Gwalior State. The main language of these districts is therefore Bhadaurī.

Where, however, the Gwalior State marches with the District of Jhansi, i.e. along the western border of the old District of Lalitpur, and, again, going south along the western border of the Saugor District, the language is the standard Bundēlī of Jhansi. It is spoken in the Gwalior Districts of Chanderi, Mungaoli, and in the eastern half of Bhilsa District, by an estimated number of 200,000 people.

The following folktale comes from the Bhilsa District, and may be taken as a specimen.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a banker, with four sons and great wealth. While he was yet alive he divided his property equally amongst his four children, except four rubies which he kept for himself as long as he lived. At God's appointed time the banker died, and his sons put the four rubies by in a basket. After some time had elapsed, the eldest son looked into the basket and found one ruby missing. So he and his brothers discussed who could be the thief, and came to the conclusion that he must have been one of the four, as no one else had been aware where the jewels had been put. So they agreed to go to the king, and they made the following petition to him: 'Your Majesty, do justice among us and have the ruby found; but in such a manner that the face of the thief may be saved.' The king told his minister to comply with the request, and added that he would neither eat nor drink till the matter was settled.

Seeing His Majesty troubled over the affair his daughter addressed him, and said, 'O father, make over the settlement of this to me.' She then set spies to watch the brothers, and to report to her what they might be saying amongst themselves. The spies were moreover instructed to fill the minds of the four with the idea that the princess could read a man's inmost thoughts. When the princess had thoroughly filled their hearts with the fear of her supernatural power, she sent for them and directed them to bring along the basket and the three remaining gems. When they came she told them that she intended to look for the missing stone that night. Accordingly, when night fell and it was quite dark, she took the three rubies out of the basket, and mixed them up with some of her own. She then gave them all to the four brothers, and told them to drop the whole lot into the basket. They did so, and after they had finished, the rubies were counted, and one more was found than the princess had given. In this way the stolen ruby was recovered, and at the same time the face of the thief was saved.

BUNDĒLĪ OF ORCHHA.

The Bundēlī of the western portion of the Bundelkhand Agency, which lies to the east of the former British District of Lalitpur, and consists of the State of Orchha, and the Jagirs of Tori Fatehpur, Bijna, Banka Pahari, and Dhurwai, is the standard form of the dialect. It has a few local peculiarities, of which we may note the following. The oblique plural of strong adjectives sometimes ends in aî or ê, as in ap^anaî or ap^anê, own; dharê, placed, agreeing in each case with a noun in the oblique plural. The usual sign of the accusative-dative is kaî, kaũ, or khã (not khô); of the agent, naî; and of the instrumental-ablative saî. Unaî is used to mean 'to them', or (respectfully) 'to him.' The nominative of the reflexive pronoun is apun, he himself, or they themselves. The sign of the conjunctive participle is kaî, as in 'uṭh-kaî, having arisen. Note the contracted form rāt, remaining. Note also that like kahî, he said, pũchhî, he asked, is always in the feminine, agreeing with bāt, understood. These peculiarities are illustrated in the accompanying folktale, which has been prepared by Rai Sahib Kashi Pershad, Vakîl, Charkhari.

HOW THE WRITER CHEATED THE GOD OF DEATH.

Once upon a time an elephant died. When he appeared before Jamrāj, the God of Death,¹ the latter asked him how it came to pass that a huge creature like him lived in subjection to a puny creature like man. The elephant replied, 'All you have to do is with dead bodies. You have nothing yet to do with living beings (and what can you know about them).' Jamrāj thought to himself that he would like to see what sort of thing a living being was, so he sent his angels to bring one down for his inspection from the World Above. They went off and brought down a writer as he was sleeping on his bed surrounded by his papers and his writing materials. When they reached Jampurī, they set him down and went off to report their arrival to His Majesty. In the meantime the Writer (whose name was Seorāj) got up and put on his clothes. He then wrote a forged order from Vishnu to this effect, 'Jamrāj is dismissed, and Seorāj is appointed in his place,' and when he had made it ready sat down to await his summons. As soon as he was brought before Jamrāj, he presented his forged order, and the King of the Dead on seeing it made over his office to Seorāj, and hurried off to Vishnu's Court, where he humbly made a representation asking what fault he had committed to earn his dismissal.

In the meantime Seorāj sent for his friends and companions from the World Above, gave them a great feast, and sent them home rejoicing. On the other hand, ¹ Jamrāj, or Yama, is the king of the Land of Shades. His realm is called Jampurī, something like the Hebrew Sheol. His messengers or Angels are called Jamdūt. According to the story, Jamrāj is a subordinate of Vishnu. He is outwitted by a man of the writer caste. This caste plays in stories such as this much the same part that a lawyer does in European folklore.

Vishpu took Jamrāj with him, and came down to Seorāj, whom he congratulated on his cleverness and sent back to the Land of Mortals. Then said he to Jamrāj, 'now you have seen what sort of thing a living being is,' and after reappointing him to his former duties, went off to his own heaven.

BUNDĒLĪ OF NARSINGHPUR.

To the East of Saugor lies the District of Damoh in which Bundēlī is also spoken. There it is an Eastern variety of the dialect similar to the Khaṭōlā spoken in Panna (see pp. 457 and 464). South-East of Damoh, and separated from it by the Bhānrēr range of Hills, lies the District of Jabalpur. The Dialect of Jabalpur is a mixed one, and has been described under the head of Baghēlī (see Vol. VI, pp 172 ff.). In the South-Western part of this last-named District, the dialect may be classed as Bundēlī with equal propriety, and shades off into pure Baghēlī in the North-East.

To the West of the Saugor District lie the States of Gwalior and Bhopal. The main language of Bhopal is the Mālwi dialect of Rājasthānī but along the Saugor border standard Bundēlī is spoken by about 67,000 people. It gradually fades off into Mālwi. In Gwalior the main language is the Bhadaurī form of Bundēlī, but along the Eastern frontier, we have, to the north, where it marches with the state of Datīā, Pāwārī Bundēlī, and further south, on the borders of Jhansi and Saugor, standard Bundēlī spoken by about 200,000 people.

South of Saugor lies the district of Narsinghpur, which is separated from it by the Vindhya range, and consists of the upper half of the Narbada valley proper. Here also, as in Saugor, the language is ordinary Bundēlī. As in the case of that district, I give a few lines of the Parable as a specimen.

BUNDĒLĪ OF HOSHANGABAD.

Immediately to the west of Narsinghpur lies the district of Hoshangabad, which lies between the Narbada valley and the Mahadeo Hills. In the Rough List of Languages of the District, its main dialect was shown as Mālwi. This was an error. The language of the Western, or Harda Tahsīl is, it is true, Mālwi, but that of the rest of the district is good Bundēli. This will be evident from the following extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, for which I am indebted to Mr. L. N. Chowdhri. A few traces of foreign influence appear, such as the occasional use of the Hindōstānī wah for 'that' and of the Mālwi thō (as well as the Bundēli hatō) for 'was.' The sign of the accusative-dative is khō̃ or khā̃. It is worth noting that here, as in the broken Bundēli of Chhindwārā, there is a tendency to use the past tense of an intransitive verb impersonally, with the subject in the agent case, as in mō̃rā-nē chalō-gaō, by-the-son it-was-gone-away, for the son went away. So, in Sanskrit we should have putrēṇa gatam. We may estimate the number of Bundēli speakers in Hoshangabad as 300,000.

BUNDĒLĪ OF SEONI.

South-east of Narsinghpur lies the district of Seoni. Bundēlī is spoken in the northern two-thirds of this district. South of this the language is Marāthī. At the same time it must be noted that in the part of the district immediately round the town of Seoni there are some 8,000 people, mainly Musalmāns, whose vernacular is Urdū.

The number of Bundēlī-speakers in Seoni district is estimated at 195,000. Immediately to the East lie the districts of Mandla and Balaghat in which the vernacular is a form of Baghēlī, so that Seoni District is the extreme south-eastern limit of Bundēlī. As will be seen from the few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son given below, the language is quite ordinary Bundēlī. The only sign of Baghēlī influence is the use of kō̃ instead of khō̃ as the sign of the accusative-dative.

In the Rough List of Languages originally compiled for Seoni, the vernacular was wrongly shown as Baghēlī, not Bundēlī.

KHAṬŌLĀ BUNDĒLĪ OF BUNDELKHAND.

Leaving the Central Provinces, we now return to Bundelkhand proper. The Bundēlī spoken in the South-centre and West-centre of the Bundelkhand Agency, i.e. in the Bijawar and Panna States, and in the Parganas of Rampur and Maharajnagar belonging to the State of Charkhari, in the Chhattarpur, Man, Deora, and Rajnagar Parganas of the Chhattarpur State, and in the Jagirs of Lugasi, Garauli, Alipura, Bihat, and Bilahri, is locally called Khaṭōlā. It is practically the same as that spoken round Orchha in the western part of the Agency, as will be evident from the following folktale, for which I am indebted to Rai Sahib Kashi Pershad of Charkhari. The number of speakers of Khaṭōlā is said to be 569,200.

We may note the following local peculiarities,—nahiyā, are not; daihan, you will give; and jaihai, he will go. Jō, this, has a nominative feminine jā.

THE PRINCESS AND THE CHEST.

Once upon a time there was a king who had one daughter. His family chaplain was a mendicant devotee who had great influence over him. The princess was very beautiful, and when she came to years of discretion her father began to think about getting her married. But the wicked chaplain himself became enamoured of her loveliness, and so, in order to keep her for himself, he persuaded the king that her birth marks were unlucky, and that the only way to save his kingdom from ruin, was to turn her out of it. The king was quite taken in by his evil counsel, and asked how he was to get rid of her. 'Shut her up,' said the devotee, 'in a wooden chest with some food, and set her floating off down the river.' Now he had some disciples living some five or six miles down the stream, and he sent word to them to look out for any wooden chest they might see floating on the river, and to bring it ashore, but not to open it till he came.

So the king shut the princess up in a wooden chest with some food, and sent her floating away. It chanced to float by the capital of another king which was also on the river bank. This king saw the chest and had it brought ashore and opened. What was his surprise to see a beautiful young princess come out of it. He asked her who she was, and she explained to him her sad fate, and that she was the daughter of such-and-such a king. 'Never mind, my dear,' said the other king. 'As you were his daughter, now you have become mine. You must live in my palace with the other women of my family.' He then got hold of a horse-faced monkey, shut it up in the chest, and sent it floating away down the river. By and bye it passed the place where the mendicant's disciples were watching, and they saw it and brought it ashore, and sent word to him that it had been successfully stopped. So he took leave from the king on some pretext or other, and hastened to his disciples. He was filled with joy when he saw the chest, and said to his disciples, 'now, you must sing hymns throughout the whole night, and if you hear any screams or calls for help, you must not pay any attention.' So they began to sing hymns at the tops of their voices, and the mendicant took up the chest and carried it into a room, where he shut the doors and windows tight, and hastened to open his box. He, of course, expected to find the princess inside, but instead there came out a monkey who at once savagely attacked him and began to tear him to pieces. The mendicant screamed out loudly for help, but the disciples remembered his instructions, and no one paid any heed to him. In the morning,¹ as there was no sign of their preceptor, the disciples at length broke open the door of the room. As they did so, a huge monkey rushed out, and, thrown in a corner, they found the mangled corpse of the mendicant.

So the Saying runs—

As a man deals with others, so will he reap himself ;

The fair one sat in a king's house, but the monkey ate the chaplain.

¹ Adh'yātri is so translated, and this meaning is required; but the word usually means 'darkness.'

KHATŌLĀ BUNDELI OF DAMOH.

In the Central Provinces District of Damoh, the vernacular is a form of Bundeli closely agreeing with the Khatōlā spoken immediately to its north in the State of Panna. This will be evident from the following short extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

LODHĀNTĪ OR RĀṬHŌRĀ BUNDĒLĪ OF HAMIRPUR AND JALAUN.

The north-western portion of the district of Hamirpur and the neighbouring country of Pargana Urai in Jalaun, across the river Betwa, have a population consisting largely of the Lōdhā caste. The tract is accordingly known as Lodhānt. The most important fiscal division in it is Pargana Rāth of Hamirpur, and the form of Bundēlī here spoken is known as Lodhāntī or Rāṭhōrā. In the heart of the Hamirpur district there are portions of the native states of the Bundelkhand Agency, viz. Pargana Bawan Chaurasi of the Charkhari State, the Sarila State, and the Jigni Jagir. Here also the language is Rāṭhōrā.

We thus get the following figures for the number of people speaking Lodhāntī or Rāṭhōrā. They are not the same as those originally published in the Rough Lists of languages of these districts.

|------------------------------|---------|
| Jalaun | 8,000 |
| Hamirpur | 98,000 |
| Bundelkhand Agency | 39,500 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 145,500 |

The Lodhāntī dialect is nearly pure Bundēlī. It has all the peculiarities of the Bundēlī of Orchha described above, such as kaũ or khã, the sign of the accusative-dative; saĩ, the sign of the instrumental-ablative; and kaĩ, the sign of the conjunctive participle. The vocabulary is peculiar. The following words occurring in the specimen (a folktale provided by Rai Sahib Kashi Pershad of Charkhari) and elsewhere are worth taking as examples:—

anuā, a false accusation, a calumny. In ordinary Hindōstānī this is considered a woman's word.

upadrai, a quarrel. Cf. Hindōstānī upadrav, a calamity.

baiyar, a woman, a wife.

chunātū, a box for holding lime, Hindōstānī chunauṭī.

khālaĩ, below.

baĩṛan, to imprison; bĩṛan, to be imprisoned. Cf. Hindōstānī bēṛā, a bolt.

nibēran, to decide, discriminate. Cf. Hindōstānī nibēṛnā, to divide.

khuwāhand (= khāwand), a husband.

suānau, gold.

luāhau, iron

akēlaĩ, but.

Generally speaking the pronunciation of Lodhāntī is more broad than elsewhere in Hamirpur. The sound of au is often preferred to that of ō. Thus, we have kau instead of kō to mean 'of', and mautī instead of mōtī, a pearl. 'My' is sometimes even muārau, cf. suānau, luāhau above. Strong adjectives, also, such as barau, great, end in au instead of ō. Similarly, we have apnai for apnē, and byātā, a son, for bētā. Most strong nouns end in ō or au, but some, especially nouns of relationship like byātā, end in ā. The oblique form of such nouns in ā also ends in ā. Thus, accusative larkā-khã, a boy. So supēt ghurā-kau palaĩchā, the saddle of the white horse.

Nouns are declined as usual. As in many other dialects there are instances of locatives or instrumentals ending in ē. Thus, gharē, in a house; bhūkhē, in or by hunger. Janaī, persons, is a nominative plural.

Among the pronouns we may note bau, he; bā, she; oblique bā for both genders. Jau is 'this.' Uē is 'him,' and una-i, 'them also.' 'Anyone' is kōū, obl. kāū. Āp or apun is 'Your Honour.'

In the case of verbs, again note the use of the feminine, agreeing with bāt understood in forms like bichārī, it was considered; kahī, it was said; pūchhī, it was asked. Other forms worth noting are ān, having come; khabā, having caused to eat; khāaī, the act of eating, a feminine verbal noun as in Banāpharī; and pahinai for pahinī, worn, a feminine in ai, again as in Banāpharī.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a merchant, whose family consisted of four persons, himself, his wife, his son's wife, and his son. Now the king of the town in which the merchant dwelt thought to himself, 'I must get up some fictitious quarrel with this merchant, and get one or two thousand rupees out of him.' So one night he went and hid himself in the rear of the merchant's house, expecting to catch his son and daughter-in-law going out, and to be able to get a fine out of him on that account. But no one came in or went out. The good folks went quietly to bed.

After a time, the daughter-in-law said to her husband, the merchant's son, 'it's getting very late, why don't you go to sleep?' Said he, 'first prepare a roll of betel for me,¹ and after I have had a chew we can go to sleep. I'll never close my eyes unless I first have a chew of betel.' She answered, 'there is no lime in the lime-box.' Then said he, 'go downstairs, and get some lime from the Old Man's (his father's) bag.' She did so, but neither was there any lime there. So she came back and told her husband. Said he, 'if I don't get some betel, I won't close my eyes. There's a pearl worth nine lakhs of rupees in your nose-ring. Make some lime by burning it in the lamp-flame.'

¹ A roll of betel is prepared with betel leaf, arecaut, and spices, of which the most important is lime.

So she made some lime out of the pearl, and prepared some betel, which he chewed, and the two went off to sleep.

Now the king, who had been hiding in the rear of the house, heard all this, and he said to himself, 'they've burnt a nine-lakh pearl for the sake of one roll of betel. This man's wealth must be limitless.'

So he went home to his palace, and as soon as morning came he had the merchant arrested and brought before him. As soon as he appeared, the king asked him, 'who is the greater, you or I?' The merchant replied, 'I do not know. Your Majesty alone knows.' Then the king put him in jail, and sent for the merchant's wife and son. 'Who,' asked he, 'is greater, I or you?' They also were unable to reply, so he put them, too, in jail, and sent for the merchant's daughter-in-law, and asked her, 'who is the greater, I or the merchant?' She replied, 'Cherisher of the Poor, if you will promise me my life I will tell.' Said the king, 'you have the promise of your life, tell.' Said she, 'neither is Your Majesty great, nor is my father-in-law. It is the day which is great.' The king asked her what she meant. Said she, 'behold, yesterday my father-in-law's day was great, so that my husband was able to eat nine lakhs worth of lime in a single betel roll; but to-day Your Majesty's day is great, for by Your Majesty's order my father-in-law, my mother-in-law, and my husband have been cast into jail, and are now lying there in hunger. Therefore, it is the day which is great. No one person is greater than anyone else.' When the king heard this reply he was much pleased, and released her father-in-law, her mother-in-law, and her husband from jail, and sent her home to her house.

PĀWĀRĪ BUNDĒLĪ OF DATIA AND THE NEIGHBOURHOOD.

Pāwārī is the name for the variety of Bundēlī which is spoken in those parts of the Gwalior and Bundelkhand Agencies of Central India, in which the Paramāra or Pāwār Rājput̃s are one of the principal clans. In the Bundelkhand Agency it is spoken in the tract lying to the west of the Jhansi District, which includes the State of Datia, and the Alampur Pargana of the State of Indore. In Gwalior it is spoken in the tract adjoining Datia, i.e. in the east of the Gird Gwalior, and in the Bhandar Districts of that State.

The number of its speakers is reported as follows:—

|------------------------------|---------|
| Bundelkhand Agency | 203,500 |
| Gwalior | 150,000 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 353,500 |

Pāwārī hardly differs at all from ordinary Bundēlī. It has a few local peculiarities, most of which it shares with the Lodhāntī just described. This will be evident from the following folktale, which, like so many of these Bundēlī specimens, has been prepared by Rai Sahib Kashi Pershad of Charkhari. We may note the following words which do not occur in ordinary dictionaries:—

hāi-pīg^alā, lamentation.

līraiṃā, a fox.

kōl-kadaiṃā, carrying on the shoulders.

sīkā, a swing-shelf.

We see very strongly in force the Bundēlī tendency to omit a medial h and to contract. Thus, we have kai for kahi, having said; raiṃgan, I shall remain; raō, remained; similarly rahat-tō, he was remaining, becomes ratō. Other verbal forms worth noting are lag^ahai, he will reach, and lakhaṃ-ratō, he was remaining gazing. The following causal verbs occur in the specimen, kuān, to cause to say; dikhāban (neuter in sense, really a potential passive), to be visible; dibān, to cause to give.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain merchant used to dwell on the banks of a tank. One day a poor man came to him to beg. The merchant said, 'I will give twenty rupees to whoever will stand in the tank all night.' The poor man said he would do so, and made the merchant promise to keep his words by a threefold promise. At night the poor man went to the tank and stood up in it. While he was there no one was seen by him. The only thing that was visible was a lamp shining in a temple of a village far away, and on it he kept gazing. At dawn he got out of the tank and went to the merchant and asked for his money. 'During the whole night,' said the merchant, 'did anyone give you any help?' 'No one,' replied the beggar, 'the only thing I saw was the lamp shining in the temple.' 'O then,' said the merchant, 'you were warming yourself at that lamp, were you?' and he refused to give him anything.

The beggar went away lamenting. On the road he met a fox, who asked him why he did so. He told the fox the whole affair, and the latter said, 'never mind, I'll get you your money; but after I have done so, you must lift me on to your shoulders and bring me back, and set me down in this very place. But first go and tell the villagers that the King of the Woods is coming, and that they must tie up all their dogs.' The beggar took the message, and then conducted his friend to the village. The fox called a meeting of the village arbitrators, and told them to set up two high poles, and between the two to hang high up a swinging tray,¹ and to set a cooking pot in the tray, and to light a fire on the ground below, so that some rice might be cooked in the pot. The arbitrators said, 'the cooking-pot is hung too high up. The flames won't reach it, and how on earth will the rice be cooked?' Replied the fox, 'it will be cooked, just as a person can warm himself from a distant lamp.' When they heard this the arbitrators had nothing to say, and the fox went on, 'neither could this poor man have warmed himself at that lamp, nor can the rice be cooked. Pay him the rupees he has earned.' So they made the merchant count out and give his twenty rupees to the poor man, who, as soon as he had got them, took the fox on his shoulder, and carried him to the forest, where he deposited him in the place where he had found him, and went home rejoicing.

A śikā is a hanging frame on which pots and the like are placed for cooking or to be out of the way.

THE MIXED DIALECTS OF THE NORTH.

To the north, Bundēli has on its west the closely related Braj Bhākhā dialect of Western Hindī and on its east the Baghēli dialect of Eastern Hindī. In the District of Hamirpur it extends nearly up to the Jamna, being separated from it only by a narrow strip of land, in which Tirhārī is spoken, along the south bank of that river. As already shown good Bundēli is spoken over nearly the whole of Hamirpur. To the east of that district lies the district of Banda.

Tirhārī and the dialects of Banda have been dealt with under the head of Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 132 ff.). These are all mixtures of Baghēli and Bundēli, and as the former language is the most prominent element in all of them they have been described under it. So also has the language spoken by some 8,000 Banāphars (Banāpharī) in Hamirpur, although Banāpharī elsewhere is distinctly a form of Bundēli.

Between Hamirpur and Banda (on both sides of the river Ken, which forms the boundary between the two districts) is a dialect called Kuṇḍrī. The Kuṇḍrī on the Banda side is a form of Jūrar-Baghēli and has been described under that head (Vol. VI, pp. 152 ff.). That on the Hamirpur side of the stream is also a mixed language, but is mostly Bundēli and is described on p. 527.

South-east of Hamirpur, i.e. in the north-east of the Bundelkhand Agency of Central India and the neighbouring portions of the Baghelkhand Agency, the true Banāpharī is spoken. It also is a mixed dialect, but here, although containing many peculiarities which are distinctively those of Eastern Hindī, it is in the main Bundēli.

Finally, so far as these mixtures with Eastern Hindī are concerned, we have seen that Tirhārī (which we have classed as a form of Baghēli) runs along the south bank of the Jamna in the Hamirpur district. At the border of the district immediately to the north-west of Hamirpur, i.e. Jalaun, it stops; but here we find, in Jalaun, a small tract in which Tirhārī is fading off into the general Bundēli of that district. This form of speech is called Nibhaṭṭā (p. 529). It is based on Bundēli, but has many of the peculiarities of Eastern Hindī. Elsewhere in Jalaun the language is good Bundēli.

On the north-west, Bundēli shades off into Braj Bhākhā through what is known as Bhadaurī (p. 531), which is spoken along the river Chambal in the districts of Agra, Mainpuri and Etawah, and also over nearly the whole of the home districts of the Gwalior State.

The following are the estimated numbers of people who speak these mixed dialects :—

| Name of Dialect. | Where spoken | Number of speakers | |
|---------------------|-----------------------|--------------------|-----------|
| Banāpharī | Bundelkhand | 245,400 | 335,400 |
| | Baghelkhand | 90,000 | |
| Kuṇḍrī | Hamirpur | | 11,000 |
| Nibhaṭṭā | Jalaun | | 10,200 |
| Bhadaurī | Gwalior | 1,000,000 | 1,313,000 |
| | Agra | 250,000 | |
| | Mainpuri | 8,000 | |
| | Etawah | 55,000 | |
| | TOTAL | | 1,669,600 |

It must be remembered that, besides these, 5,000 speakers of Banāpharī in Hamirpur, and a few speakers of Kuṇḍrī in Banda have been classed under Baghēlī.

Of these dialects Banāpharī is by far the most important on account of its possessing a literature. Bhadaurī, on account of the number of its speakers, comes next.

BANĀPHARĪ.

Banāpharī is the form of Bundēlī spoken by members of the Banāphar tribe of Rājput̄s, and in the country inhabited by them. This tract consists mainly of the north-centre and east of the Bundelkhand Agency of Central India, i.e. the Chandla Pargana of the State of Charkhari, the Lauri Pargana of Chhatarpur, the Dharampur Pargana of Panna, the Jāgīrs of Naigawan Rebai, Gaurihar, and Beri, and the States of Ajaigarh and Baoni. It also extends into the south-east corner of the District of Hamirpur, and (to the east) into the western parts of the Nagode and Maihar States of the Baghelkhand Agency. Although a mixed dialect, Banāpharī is one of the most important forms of Bundēlī, as in it are preserved the many bardic songs regarding the famous heroes Ālhā and Ūdal, which together form a large cycle of epic poetry. This feature of the dialect will be illustrated at length in the following pages.

The number of speakers of Banāpharī is estimated as follows:—

|------------------------------|---------|
| Bundelkhand Agency | 245,400 |
| Hamirpur | 5,000 |
| Baghelkhand Agency | 90,000 |
| TOTAL | 340,400 |

Leech in his account of the language quoted in the list of authorities of Bundēlī remarks that Banāpharī differs from Standard Bundēlī in having a larger mixture of Urdū. He probably means by this that its vocabulary contains more Arabic and Persian words than are usually found in dialects of this part of India, and in this he is perfectly right. A perusal of the specimens, especially of those belonging to the Ālhā-Ūdal cycle, will show that quite a large number of these foreign words have been adopted. Indeed such complete citizenship have some of them obtained, that they are even treated as verbal roots, and conjugated as if they were genuine Indian words. This method of dealing with foreign words is very rare in all Indian languages. Such borrowed terms are generally employed without any change of form, and, if used as verbs, it must be done by means of a periphrasis. Yet here we have words like najarat a present participle, meaning 'looking at,' which in Hindī would be najar kar'tā, from the Arabic naẓar; and tajawījai, he intends, from the Arabic tajwīz. Leech further describes Banāpharī as a 'kind of slurred and slovenly Urdū.' This account cannot be called accurate, for the foreign element found in its grammar is Baghēlī, not Urdū. Banāpharī is a mixture of Bundēlī and Baghēlī in proportions varying according to locality and to the personality or caste of the speakers. In the version of the Parable received from Hamirpur the Baghēlī influence predominates and I have given it in the volume dealing with Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 155 and ff.). Further south, in Bundelkhand proper, the Bundēlī element certainly predominates everywhere, as will be evident from the specimens received from the State of Charkhari. These are (1) the first few sentences of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and (2) a folktale (both prepared by Rai Sahib Kashi Pershad of Charkhari). After these I give, with a special introduction, two more specimens from Eastern Hamirpur. These are parts of the cycle of poems about Ālhā and Ūdal. It will be seen that the version of the Parable agrees with Standard Bundēlī in nearly all particulars, but that the other three specimens show numerous examples of the influence of Eastern Hindī.

The following account of the main peculiarities of Banāpharī is based on the specimens and on Mr. Vincent Smith's notes.

PRONUNCIATION.—This closely follows ordinary Bundēlī. The diphthongs ai and au are commonly used for ē and ō respectively. Thus sai instead of sē, from. Far more common is the change of ō to wā and of ē to yā. This is quite optional, so much so that we often find the same word spelt in both ways. Thus, we have yār for ēr, a support; both khēt and khyāt, a field; kēr and kyār, of; ghōr and ghwār, a horse.

As regards consonants, n often becomes l; thus, jalam, for janam, birth; jalani, for jananī, a mother. L, on the other hand, often becomes r, as in tar^wār or tal^wūr, a sword. The letter ph regularly becomes p in the word banāpar. We often find the letter r where we should not expect it; thus, sar^mmān, for sanmān, respect; sar^mmūch, for samūch, entire; and asarār, ? for bē-shumār, countless.

A long vowel is regularly shortened in the antepenultimate; thus, the root mān, heed, makes its first person singular future manihāũ, and khēl, sport, makes its respectful imperative khiliyāĩ. We occasionally meet short e and short o, in words like mohi, me (but mō-hī, even I), and jeh, whom.

DECLENSION.—Many feminine nouns end in the termination aĩ (corresponding to Hindōstānī ī), which is not changed in the oblique case. Thus, ēk juhāraĩ, one salute; śikāraĩ, hunting; khabaraĩ, news, used both as a singular and as a plural; salāmaĩ, respects, used as a plural in III, 58. Strong Tadbhava nouns usually end in ō, as in Bundēlī, but sometimes the Eastern Hindī form in ā is employed. These nouns form their oblique bases in ē. Thus, ghōrō, or ghōṛā, a horse, oblique form, ghōṛē. Sometimes we have, as in bhaũrā, a bee (IV, 1), the oblique form ending in ā, which is probably an instance of borrowing from Rājasthānī; similarly chēlā-nai kahus, the disciple said.

A very common oblique form both in the singular and in the plural ends in an or en. Thus, khētan-mā, in the field (III, 77; cf. 78, and IV, 193); chaukan-kā, to the palace square; āhũ saudāgar māĩ ghōṛen-kā, ghōṛan-kā bēchaĩ jāw, I am a merchant of horses, I am going to sell the horses (IV, 122).

The use of the case of the Agent is rather capricious, as the termination nē or nai is often omitted. The case is used before all forms of the past tenses of transitive verbs, whether the simple past participle is used, as in Western Hindī, or whether a conjugated form of the tense is used, as in Eastern Hindī. Hence, even in the latter case, the verb agrees in gender with the object. Thus we have bānī-nai lāg taul-dai, the shopman weighed out the ration; yā bāt brāhman sunī, the Brāhman heard this thing; bābā pūchhis, the recluse asked; chēlā-nai kahus, the disciple said; nā śikhyũ (fem.) barāraĩ sāg, I have not learnt the warding off of arrows (IV, 183). In the last example, śikhyũ is in the feminine to agree with barāraĩ. The masculine would be śikhōy.

The following are the usual forms which the case terminations take :—

Agent, nē, nai.

Accusative-Dative, khā (not khō), kā, kā, kaũ, kai.

Dative, lānē, khītīr, kājē, for.

Instrumental-Ablative, sai, saĩ, khaĩ, tai, saũ, sô, san, pai.

Genitive, kēr, kyār. Common gender, direct and oblique.

kērau, kyārau, kau, kā. Masculine, direct.

kērē, kyārē, kē. Masculine, oblique.

kērī, kyārī, kai, kī. Feminine, direct and oblique.

Locative, mai, mā, mā, mähĩ, mahanī.

The Personal Pronouns are mai, maĩ, I; ma-hũ, I also; ma-hĩ, even I; obl. form, mohi, moh, mwaħ, mō; mōhĩ, to me; mōr, mōrau, mōār, mōārau, my; ham, we; ham-hũ, we also; ham-hĩ, even we; obl. form, ham; hamaĩ, to us; hamār, hamārau, hamārau, our.

tuĩ, taĩ, tai, thou; ta-hũ, tō-hũ, thou also; ta-hĩ, tō-hĩ, even thou; obl. form, tohi, toh, twaħ, tō; tōhĩ, to thee; tōr, tōrau, twār, twārau, thy; tum, you; tum-hũ, you also; tum-hĩ, even you; obl. form, tum; tumaĩ, to you; tumār, tumārau, tumārau, your.

ũ, wā, he, that; wa-hũ, he also; wa-hai, even he; obl. form, wah, wā; wahĩ, to him; ũy, ũy, they; wō-ũ, wa-ũ, they also; obl. form, un; un'haĩ, to them; un'hun, them also; un'hin, even them.

Similarly ĩ, yā, this; obl. form, eh, yā; Plur. ĩ; obl. in, etc.

The Relative Pronoun is jē or jyā; obl. jeh, jē, jyā.

In all the above, the plural is frequently used instead of the singular.

Kāhũ or kōũ is 'anyone,' obl. kāhũ. Kō or kaun (obl. kyū) is 'who?'; kā (obl. kāhē), what?

CONJUGATION.—The important point to note is that in all the tenses formed from participles without auxiliary verbs there are two forms, one, the participle alone as in Western Hindī, and the other, the participle with suffixes indicating the number and person, as in Eastern Hindī. It is also to be noted that in the latter case, the suffixes are added to the strong form of the participle in ō, and not to the simple base. Thus mārō-s, not māra-s, he struck.

The Verb Substantive is

| 2 | māras . | mārā . |
| 3 | mārai . | māraī . |

As usual this is often employed in the sense of the Simple Present. As examples of the tense we may quote mānas, if you do not heed (IV, 29); bwālas, thou speakest (IV, 42); māgas, (what) thou mayest ask for (IV, 101); jās, thou art going (IV, 119); khāy, they eat (III, 44).

The following are examples of the Imperative:—Mār, strike thou; mārā, strike; pukārā, summon; kāḷau, cut; karāyas, cause thou to make; khiliyaī, be good enough to play.

Future.—I shall strike, etc. This has two forms, viz.—1. Mārab, used for all genders, numbers, and persons, as in old Eastern Hindī;—2.

| | Sing. | Plur. |
|---|--|---|
| 3 | māri. | marīhāĩ or mar^ahāĩ. |

Note that when the first syllable is long, and falls in the antepenultimate, it is shortened. So we have manīhaũ, I will heed, in IV, 133. Kaihai (IV, 133), thou wilt say, is slightly irregular as in Bundēli.

Tenses formed from the Present Participle.

The Present Participle is mārat (com. gen.); or mar^atō (masc.), mar^atī (fem.). From it are formed the usual tenses. Thus,— Present.—Mārat-haũ (often written mārathaũ), I am striking. Any other form of the Auxiliary may be used.

Imperfect.—Mārat-hatōy, I was striking. Any other form of the Auxiliary may be used. As an isolated form, I may quote karai rahai, he was doing.

Past Conditional.—This may be formed in two ways. Either the present participle alone is used (exactly as in Hindōstānī), or else we have a tense conjugated on the model of Eastern Hindī. For the first form we have mar^atō (masc.), mar^atī (fem.), (if) I, thou, he, or she had struck; mar^atē (masc.), mar^atī (fem.), (if) we, you, or they had struck. For the second form we have the following:—

| | Sing. | | Plur. | |
|---|----------------------------|----------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------|
| | Masc. | Fem. | Masc. | Fem. |
| 1 | mar^atōy. | mar^atyū. | mar^atyan. | mar^atin. |
| 2 | mar^atōy. | mar^atī. | mar^atyō. | mar^atyū. |
| 3 | mar^atō. | mar^atī. | mar^atē. | mar^atī. |

Tenses formed from the Past Participle.

The Past Participle is mār (com. gen.); or mārō (masc.), mārī (fem.). From it are formed the usual tenses. Thus—

Past.—Like the Past Conditional, this may be formed in two ways. Either the Past Participle alone is used (exactly as in Hindōstānī), or else we have a tense conjugated on the model of Eastern Hindi. In both cases, if the verb is a transitive one, the construction is passive. The subject is put into the Agent case, and the verb agrees in gender with the object. In the second conjugated form, it agrees with the subject in person. Thus, maĩ-nai mārōy means 'I struck something masculine,' but maĩ-nai māryū means 'I struck something feminine.' The following is the ordinary method of conjugating the past tense of a transitive verb. The conjugation of an intransitive verb differs in the third person.

| | Sing. | | Plur. | |
|---|---------------|---------------|----------------|---------------|
| | Masc. | Fem. | Masc. | Fem. |
| 1 | mārōy. | māryū. | māryan. | māru. |
| 2 | mārōy. | māri. | māryō. | māryū. |
| 3 | mārōs. | māris. | mārōn. | Not given. |

These may be taken as the standard forms, but other forms for the third person singular are met. These are māras, māris, and mārus.

In the case of an intransitive verb, the third person singular, as noted above, is not used. Only the past participle alone is employed. Thus, baith or baithō, he sat down; baith or baithī, she sat down; baith or baithē, they (masc.) sat down; baith or baithī, they (fem.) sat down.

Perfect.—Mār-haū or mārō-haū, I have struck. Any other form of the Auxiliary can be used.

Pluperfect.—Mār-hatōy or mārō-hatōy, I had struck. Any other form of the Auxiliary can be used. In both tenses the construction is that of ordinary Hindōstānī.

The Infinitive is māran, māraĩ, mārab, or marbō. Māraĩ is feminine in gender when used as a verbal noun. The others are masculine. The oblique form of the first three is the same as the nominative. That of marbō is marbē.

Irregular Verbs.—

The following irregular past participles have been noted :—

| Infinitive. | Past Participle. |
|---|--|
| dēb , to give | dawō , dau , dinh , or din ; fem. of dawō or dau , dī . |
| | From dinh , we have dinhō , fem. dinhī . |
| lēb , to take | The same as for dēb , substituting l for d . |
| karab , to do | kar , karō , or kīnh , kīnhō . |

The verbs āub, and jāib, are quite irregular in the past tense. That of āub is conjugated as follows :—

| | Sing. | | Plur. | |
|---|--------------|-------------|--------------|-------------|
| | Masc. | Fem. | Masc. | Fem. |
| | | | | |
| 1 | āwaĩ. | āyũ. | āyan. | āin. |
| 2 | āwai. | āyī. | āyō. | āyū. |
| 3 | āwō. | āī. | āyē. | āĩ. |

Any other form of the past participle may be used for the third person. The past tense of jāib is similar. Thus, gawaĩ, I went, and so on.

The future of āub is aihaũ, I shall come; aibē, etc., we shall come; aī, he shall come. Similarly, jaihaũ, I shall go.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there were a Brahman and his wife. A famine occurred, so the Brahman deserted his wife, and ran away to the Deccan, where he took service with a banker, and earned five hundred rupees. When two years had passed, he remembered his wife, and, taking leave of the banker, set out for his home. While he was on the way, it struck him that his wife would probably be in debt, so he decided to deposit his savings with some well-to-do person to protect them from her creditors. He accordingly went to a shopkeeper in his village, and asked him to take the money on deposit.

While he was speaking to him the disciple of a certain mendicant devotee came up to beg from the shopman, and the latter, being busy with the Brahman, weighed out the alms in a hurry. The disciple brought what he had got to his master the recluse, who asked him why he had brought more than usual that day. Replied the disciple, 'there was a traveller talking to the shopkeeper about depositing five hundred rupees, and owing to his being busy with him, he weighed out my alms in a hurry.' The recluse thought to himself that he must get hold of that traveller some way or other, so he gave the flour and clarified butter which was over and above the regular amount to the disciple, and told him to take it to the shopkeeper with this message, 'my master will not eat anything wrongly taken from anybody.' The disciple did what he was told, and when the Brahman heard what he said, he thought to himself, 'this recluse must be a very honest man. I will deposit my money with him.' So he went off to the recluse and addressed him as follows,—'Holy Sir, will you deign to keep my money in deposit?' The recluse took the money into an inner room, and there buried it in the presence of its owner, who then went on in happiness to his home. When he got there he asked his wife if she owed any debts, and she replied that she did not. After a few days the Brahman returned to the recluse and asked for his money, but the latter said, 'when did you ever leave any money with me?' Filled with shame at the recluse's duplicity, the Brahman went off to his landlord and complained of how he had been treated. Said the landlord, 'it is beyond my power to help you; but go and tell your story to the dancing girl of such and such a village.*' He did so, and she told him to meet her on such and such a day at the recluse's. On the day fixed the dancing girl brought her savings to the recluse, and said to him, 'my master went some time ago to the fair of Madāran¹ and has not come back. I am going to look for him, and want you to keep my money in deposit for me while I am away.' Just then the Brahman entered and again asked for his deposit. The recluse at once gave it to him, for he thought that if this fellow quarrelled with him the dancing girl would not trust him with her money. As soon, however, as she saw that the Brahman had safely got his rupees, she said to the recluse, 'my brother has just come, and he says that my master has returned from the Madāran, so now I won't have to trouble you with the deposit.' Then the dancing girl began to laugh, and so did the Brahman, and so did the recluse. As the saying goes:—

The dancer laughed, for her master had come ;

The traveller laughed, for he got his purse.

Master mendicant, why did you laugh ?

' Because I have learnt this new trick.'

¹ This is the fair held at Makanpur in Kanauj in honour of the famous saint Shah Madar, who is buried there.

THE SONGS OF ĀLHĀ AND ŪDAL.

I do not suppose that any epic poem is at the present day so popular as that of Ālhā and Ūdal, which is sung by itinerant bards all over northern India. The entire cycle has never been collected, but portions of it and even translations of portions have often been published. The earliest version of the epic with which we are acquainted is contained in the Mahōbā Khand of the Prithirāj Rāsau, attributed to Chand Bardāi (Fl. 1190 A.D.). Chand Bardāi was the court bard of Prithirāj Chauhān, King of Delhi. The Mahōbā Khand deals mainly with the war between that Monarch and Parmāl, the Chandēl of Mahōbā, and according to another, and more probable, tradition was the work of Jagnāik, the bard of Parmāl. A translation of a part of it will be found in Tod's Rajasthan, i. 614 and ff. There are two or three native editions of the modern cycle, none of which is complete. Portions of one of them were translated by Mr. Waterfield into vigorous English ballad metre, and appeared in vols. lxi, lxii, and lxiii of the Calcutta Review, under the title of the 'Nine-Lākh Chain, or the Mārō feud.' A full account of the contents of these editions, from the pen of the present writer, will be found in vol. xiv of the Indian Antiquary, pp. 255 and ff. An edition of the text and a translation of the chapter relating to Ālhā's marriage, as current in Bihār, also by the present writer, will be found on pp. 209 and ff. of the same volume.

Some years ago Mr. Vincent Smith was kind enough to present me with a collection of notes on the Bundēlī dialect of Hamirpur, which he had made when he was employed in the settlement of that district. These contained the following two extracts from the cycle, which are given just as they were taken down under his supervision from the lips of rustic singers. Both are fragments, but they are valuable not only as specimens of the Banāpharī sub-dialect of Bundēlī, but also as being genuine specimens of a class of poetry which is very popular over a large part of our Indian possessions. In Hamirpur the whole series of songs dealing with Ālhā and Ūdal is known as the 'Sairā' or 'Ālhā.' Separate fragments which are recited at one time are called 'Pāwārā,' 'Samay' or 'Mār.'

The text given below is that of Mr. Vincent Smith, unaltered. The translation is also based on a rough version prepared by him to accompany the texts. I am responsible for the notes.

It is unnecessary to give here a full account of the contents of the Ālhā cycle. Those interested in the subject will find what they require (so far as is known) in the article in the Indian Antiquary quoted above. I propose to give here so much of the legend as is necessary for understanding the specimens now printed. It is to be understood that what is narrated is legend (and not the only legend,—they are often contradictory) and not history. The main characters are historical, but their adventures, as here recorded, are not.

The three royal personages dealt with are—(1) Prithirāj or Pithaurā, the Chauhān King of Delhi; (2) Jaichand, the Rāthōr King of Kanauj; and (3) Parmāl or Parmardī, the Chandēl King of Mahōbā in Bundelkhand.' The two first were cousins.

¹ Once for all, I warn the reader that I do not transcribe these and other names in the cycle with absolute accuracy. I only give the popular spelling. For instance 'Parmāl' should properly be 'Par'māl.'

Both were grand-nephews of Anang Pāl Tōmar of Delhi, and, when he died, Prithirāj, although the younger, was proclaimed King to the exclusion of Jaichand. The result was a lifelong enmity between the two princes, which eventually facilitated the conquering of India by the Tartar hordes of Central Asia. Prithirāj and his bard Chand were killed in battle fighting against the Muhammadans in the year 1193 A.D. Kanauj was overwhelmed, and Jaichand slain in the following year by Shihābu'd-dīn, the 'Meteor of the Faith,' and his son fled to Marwar, where he established the principality now known as Jodhpur. Parmāl reigned from about 1165 to 1202 A.D. He was defeated and expelled from Mahōbā by Prithirāj in the year 1182. Here legend departs from history. According to the former Parmāl was so crushed with this defeat that he abandoned his kingdom and fled to Gayā where he ultimately died, being the last of the Chandēl Kings of Mahōbā. As a matter of history twenty years later we still find him fighting bravely against the Musalmān Kutbu'd-dīn at Kālinjar. He was not the last of his race, but had several obscure successors on the throne.

The historical Parmāl was probably the son of his predecessor Madana-Varmā Chandēl, but the legendary account is quite different. It runs as follows :—

Parmāl conquered the whole of India. The first city he conquered was Mahōbā in Bundelkhand, of which Bāsdēo Parihār was the prince. Bāsdēo had one son Māhil and three daughters, Malnā (also called Padminī), Diwalā, and Tilkā. Parmāl married Malnā and treated Māhil with consideration, but the latter never forgave his father's conqueror and was the cause of his ultimate downfall. He is throughout the villain of the cycle.

Parmāl, according to Chandēl custom, had two faithful attendants belonging to the Banāphar tribe of Rājput. They were named Dasrāj and Bachhrāj. To Dasrāj he gave his sister-in-law Diwalā in marriage, and to Bachhrāj, Tilkā. By these marriages, Dasrāj had two sons Ālhā and (much younger) Ūdal, and Bachhrāj had one, Malkhā, Dasrāj had another son by an Ahīr woman, who was named Chaurā or Chaūrā.¹ On his birth he was exposed in the river, and was picked up and taken to Prithirāj Chauhān of Delhi, who adopted him as a son, and when he grew up, appointed him to a command in his army. We thus find him, in the final catastrophe, fighting against his half-brothers Ālhā and Ūdal. Dasrāj also had a daughter, who bore a son called Sīhā.

Finally, Parmāl had a son by Malnā, named Brahmajit Varmā. Much against his father's will he married Bēlā, the daughter of Prithirāj, but was killed while yet a boy on the fatal field of Uraī. He never brought his bride home, and, in the specimens now given, we find Bēlā still in her father's house, but, like a true Rājput wife, a strong partisan on her husband's side of the quarrel. We thus get the following legendary genealogical table :—

The other prominent figures in the poem (besides Prithirāj and Jaichand) are :—

Jagnāik, bard of Parmāl.

Lākhan, nephew of Jaichand.

Rāypāl, elder son of Jaichand.

Gulālan, younger son of Jaichand.

Rāybhān, Rājā of Kurhat, a fief of Kanauj, under Jaichand.

Matauwā Ahīr, in the service of Brahmajit.

Ḍiriyā, Ūdal's henchman. He was groom of the horse Bendulā.

Rāmāpati of Gwalior, one of Prithirāj's commanders.

Ranjit, another son of Parmāl.

Alkhā, another son of Bachhrāj.

Kariliyā, the name of Ālhā's horse

Bendulā or Benduliyā, Ūdal's horse

Singhin, Miyān Tālhan's horse.

Manōrath, Jaichand's horse

} These were magic horses and could fly.

Of the above Miyān (or Mīrā) Tālhan is the most important figure. He was a Musalmān of Benares, who took service under Parmāl. He and Dasrāj (Ālhā and Ūdal's father) were intimate friends, and had exchanged turbans. After the latter's death he attached himself to Ālhā and Ūdal, and followed their fortunes to Kanauj. Ālhā looked upon him as his father, and he appears throughout as the Nestor of the story. He was killed in the final struggle at Uraī and was buried at Mahōbā, where his tomb near the Kīrat Sāgar is still shown. He rode a horse called 'the lioness' (Singhin) and had nine sons and eighteen grandsons.

Parmāl gave Ālhā the district of Kālinjar, to the south-east of Mahōbā (in the present district of Banda) as his fief. To Malkhā he gave the fief of Sirsā.¹ We pass over the many and glorious exploits of Ālhā, Ūdal, and Malkhā in their early years and hasten to the final catastrophe. Māhil, Parmāl's brother-in-law and evil counsellor, saw that there was no hope of compassing the latter's ruin so long as he was protected by these valiant champions. He persuaded Parmāl to demand from Ālhā his famous mare, Kariliyā, and, on the request being refused, so far to forget their services as to expel the brothers ignominiously from his territory. With their mother and families, and accompanied by Tālhan of Benares, they repaired to Kanauj, where Jaichand received them, but, being himself in dread of Ālhā, despatched him on an expedition against the rebellious chiefs of Gānjar (traditionally identified with Gujerat), who had hitherto successfully defied all the forces sent against them. Accompanied by Lākhan, the nephew of Jaichand, Ālhā and Ūdal successfully accomplished their task, and were received into great favour, Ālhā having the fief of Rāykōṭ (near Kanauj) assigned to him.

In the meantime a quarrel had arisen between Prithirāj Chauhān of Delhi and Parmāl regarding some troops of the former who had been cut up while passing through the latter's territory. Māhil diligently fanned the flame, and persuaded Prithirāj to bide his time for vengeance. After the lapse of eight years Māhil contrived in his capacity as minister to send Parmāl's army to the south, and then sent word to Prithirāj that the way was now open to Mahōbā. Prithirāj at once advanced and attacked Sirsā, where Malkhā was governor. The latter sent pressing appeals for help to Parmāl, who, under the traitorous persuasion of Māhil, replied that it was Malkhā's business to drive out Prithirāj. Deeply hurt at this supercilious reply, Malkhā nevertheless made a brave resistance, but was in the end overwhelmed by superior numbers, and himself met a glorious death in the midst of his foes.

Parmāl, now seriously alarmed for the safety of his kingdom, called a council, and on the advice of Malnā, his queen, demanded a truce from his adversary on the plea of the absence of his champions Ālhā and Ūdal. Prithirāj, with Rājput chivalry, granted the request, on condition that, at the end of a year, during which each party was to prepare for the final battle, it should be fought on open ground, which should give no advantage to either party, and the vast plain round Uraī (in the present district of Jalaun) was fixed upon as the deciding scene of the contest.

Parmāl then despatched his bard Jagnāik to Kanauj to recall Ālhā and Ūdal. On the way Jagnāik halted at Kurhat on the bank of the Jamna, where the local Rājā, Rāybhān, hospitably entertained him, but in the morning refused to return to his guest the splendid armour with which his horse was decked. Jagnāik accordingly went on to Kanauj vowing vengeance against Rāybhān.

He was cordially received by Ālhā who, however, refused to assist Parmāl till his mother Diwalā pressed upon him his duty as a Rājput. 'Let us fly to Mahōbā,' exclaimed Diwalā.¹ But Ālhā was silent, while Ūdal said aloud, 'May evil spirits seize Mahōbā! Can we forget the day when, in distress, he drove us forth. Return to Mahōbā—let it stand or fall, it is the same to me; Kanauj is henceforth my home.'

'Would that the Gods had made me barren,' said Diwalā, 'that I had never borne sons, who thus abandon the paths of the Rājputs, and refuse to succour their prince in danger!' Her heart bursting with grief, and her eyes raised to heaven, she continued; 'Was it for this, O Universal Lord, thou mad'st me feel a mother's pangs for these destroyers of Banāphar's fame? Unworthy offspring! the heart of the true Rājput dances with joy at the mere name of strife—but ye, degenerate, cannot be the sons of Dasrāj—some carl must have stolen to my embrace, and from such ye must be sprung.' The young chiefs arose, their faces withered in sadness. 'When we perish in defence of Mahōbā, and, covered with wounds, perform deeds that will leave a deathless name; when our heads roll in the field—when we embrace the valiant in fight, and, treading in the footsteps of the brave, make resplendent the blood of both lines, even in the presence of the heroes of the Chauhān, then will our mother rejoice.'

At length roused to indignation Ālhā rushed impetuously to Jaichand, and demanded leave to depart. This was at first refused, but ultimately granted after an angry scene; and the king of Kanauj not only gave the required permission, but sent a powerful army, headed by his own sons Rāypāl and Gulālan, and his nephew Lākhan, with Ālhā to assist the Chandēl against the Chauhān of Delhi.

The army marched. On the way they passed Kurhaṭ where Jagnāik demanded vengeance for his stolen horse-armour. A battle ensued in which Rāybhān was defeated and compelled to restore his booty. In admiration of the Banāphars' valour, he, too, joined the advancing host. As the troops went on, the worst omens appeared on all sides. The countenance of Lākhan fell; these portents filled his soul with dismay; but Ālhā said, 'though these omens bode death, yet death to the valiant, to the pure in faith, is an object of desire, not of sorrow. The path of the Rājput is beset with difficulties, rugged, and filled with thorns; but he regards it not, so it but conducts to battle.' To carry joy to Parmāl alone occupied their thoughts; the steeds bounded over the plain like the swift-footed deer.

On the way, in spite of the truce, they were suddenly and unexpectedly attacked at a river crossing by the Chauhān army, led by Chaurā. All but Lākhan fled. He made a gallant stand with his handful of troops, but was nearly overpowered. Diwalā, after vainly trying to stop Ālhā and Ūdal in their flight, ordered her dooly to be set down, and getting out desired Ūdal to enter it and give her his sword and shield; for though he fled, she disdained to fly. Her reproaches, as contained in Chand's verses, form one of the most famous passages in the whole cycle. They will be found in verses 98 and following of the first of the following extracts. Stung by her reproaches Ālhā and Ūdal returned and repulsed Chaurā.

The brothers, ere they reached Mahōbā, halted to put on the saffron robe, the sign of 'no quarter' to the Rājput warrior. The intelligence of their approach filled the Chandēl prince with joy, who advanced to embrace his defenders, and conduct them into the city; while the queen Malnā came to greet Diwalā, who with the herald bard paid homage and returned with the queen into the palace.

On the arrival of the brothers in the citadel, a council of war was held. Parmāl, always a coward,¹ at first resolved to abandon Mahōbā, but, urged by the Banāphars and their mother, he at length consented to march his host towards Urai. In the preliminary fights, which lasted several days, the boy Brahmajit Varmā, his son, died gallantly fighting against superior numbers, and Chaurā hastened to convey the news to Delhi, where the youthful hero's wedded, but yet unmated, bride Bēlā was still dwelling in the citadel of her father Prithirāj. Overjoyed at the terrible blow with which his foe was smitten the Chauhān ordered his commander to complete the victory by carrying off from Mahōbā Parmāl's queen, the lovely Padminī or Malnā, and conveying her to the royal seraglio at Delhi; but Chaurā himself had a fair young wife, and stayed to dally with her, while he despatched his lieutenant, Rāmāpati of Gwalior, to carry out his lord's behest. The widowed Bēlā, true to the fortunes of the house into which she had been married, sent private word of this design to Ūdal, who intercepted Rāmāpati at Kālpi and there, after a fierce conflict, slew him.

At length the fatal day arrived, and the camps of the two kings stood face to face on the plain of Uraī. Parmāl, on seeing the enemy's preparations, feared, like the poltroon he was, for his own safety. He determined to abandon his army, and, notwithstanding all Ālhā's and the other chief's entreaties to remain and animate his troops, he not only refused to stay, but insisted on Ālhā himself escorting him to Kālinjar. Before Ālhā could return to command his forces, the battle had been fought, and Parmāl's troops had been annihilated. Ālhā's son Indal, Ūdal, and the faithful Tālhan had all been slain. Seeing this, furious with rage, Ālhā drew his magic sword to destroy Prithirāj's army; but his arm was arrested by the goddess Dēvī Śārādā,¹ and at her entreaty he consented to sheathe his sword, if Prithirāj would turn and fly seven paces. Prithirāj did so, and, satisfied by this concession to his invincibleness, Ālhā disappeared from mortal view, and now dwells in that mysterious land of darkness, the Kajrī-ban, which is so famed in all the legends of the east. On the last day of each moon he visits Dēvī Śārādā's temple on the hill at Mahiyār and adorns her image with fresh flowers. He has repeatedly been seen, but, each time at a stern command to desist from following him, no one has ever ventured to advance, and he has disappeared.

After the defeat at Uraī, according to the legend,² Parmāl fled to Gayā, where he died.

So ends this tale of Rājput chivalry. If I have drawn sufficient attention to it to induce some resident in Bundelkhand to collect its scattered remnants from the only books in which it is preserved,—the mouths of the bardic reciters,—I shall be amply satisfied. It is a noble story, replete with incident, and with characters well contrasted. It appeals far more closely to English sympathies than do the comparatively artificial epics of Sanskrit literature.

Of the following two extracts, the first (marked Specimen III) is a fragment. It describes the summons of Ālhā and Ūdal from Kanauj to Mahōbā, the march from Kanauj and the fight with the Chauhān forces on the way. It breaks off abruptly in the middle of the combat. The second (marked Specimen IV) commences in Delhi, where Chaurā brings the news of the death of Brahmajit at Uraī. It then describes Rāmāpati's mission to abduct Mahā, and how he was defeated on the way by Ūdal, who had been forewarned by Bēlā.

² But not according to history. Most of the foregoing narrative is based on Tod, with additions from the seventh volume of the reports of the Archaeological Survey of India.

Jaichand.—What, has aught fallen into the Jamnā or has the high bank fallen into the pool? I ask of you, Prince Lākhan,¹ whence comes this clashing sound?

Lākhan.—Nought has fallen into the Jamnā, nor has the high bank fallen into the pool. The champion of Mahōbā is coming, whose weapons clash together.

Jaichand.—(5) My limbs tremble,² my body quakes, my thirty-two teeth shake; if he of Mahōbā come in his pride, he will bring my Kanauj to ruin.

Lākhan.—Say not so, Sire, for the false pleases me not; as once he served³ the Chandēl, even so he serves you.

For the space of a mile⁴ floor-clothes are spread; of pillows there were some fifteen hundred; (10) where the people sat cross-legged and touching each other, the javelins covered the earth as blades of grass.⁵

There was the clanging of iron, there weapons of the finest steel⁶ clashed together, where the Rājput̃s sat clan by clan, reclining on cushions.⁷ They were bemused from the opium they had eaten, men who without blows would not change their purpose.⁸ Each man with his sacred sword upon his thigh, like a black snake coiled.⁹

(15) The camel-courier alighted in the court and said, 'Rājā, hear my words;¹⁰ the Hero of Mahōbā is coming; Rājā beware!' On seeing Ālhā approach, the assembly rose trembling.¹¹ Every man made obeisance; great respect was shown,¹² and on the right side in the middle of the tent a place was cleared for Ālhā.¹³

² ḍwālai is for ḍōlai. Here, as elsewhere, wa is substituted for ḍ.

³ The root thāp = serve.

⁴ A gaū-kōs is an indefinite measure of distance; literally, the distance from which the low of a cow can be heard.

⁵ Pal'thī is a method of sitting on the ground. The feet are crossed, with the knees wide apart. Arajhī tī=ul'ihi tī. The earth was green (hariyāy) with darts.

⁶ Kāṣṭī is a kind of steel manufactured in the town in Oudh of that name. Sār, essence, is commonly used to signify excellence of quality.

¹⁰ Sār'nī or sārīnī is a female camel.

¹¹ The root ḍaharā = to tremble.

¹² Gan ḍīlan, literally 'counting bodies,' hence 'everyone.' Sar'mān is a corruption of sammān.

¹³ Bāṭ = arm, hence 'side.'

Jaichand.—(20) It is your wont to make obeisance once in the morning, and once again at evening;¹ what calamity has befallen you that you come at midday?²

Ālhā.—It is my wont to make obeisance once in the morning, and once again at evening; now a summons has come from Mahōbā, and therefore, Rājā, I pay you my respects.³

Jaichand.—You have come out as an overfed horse breaks from his stable.⁴ (25) When I will, I can slay you; why think you of Mahōbā's town?⁵ Laughing the Rājā spoke,—Ālhā, hear my words. For each grain of wheat I shall take two, and the price of clarified butter I shall exact fourfold. Water shall I appraise at the price of milk.⁶ Ālhā, hear my words. You have eaten and waxed furious in Gānjar; in the forefront of the battle shall I strike you down.⁷ (30) The Chandōlā drove you out, while the house sweepers pelted you with sugarcane refuse.⁸ Have you lost remembrance of that day, that you come to me at noon?

Laughing then Ūdal⁹ spake,—Rājā, hear my words. Who is he that can drive me out? Who in the world has teeth in his mouth?¹⁰ Those for whose sake I had fled were lost in Gānjar; (35) Your father never gained even Gānjar fort, but I won and gave you Bengal: Bērī too I smote, so that it cried like a goat when held by the ear.¹¹ I smote Bijahtā, and at midday I fired Bengal. He who had nine times routed Lākhan, and slain the father of the Kanauj prince,¹² him, O Rājā, I delivered to you; then you slept at peace in the midst of Kanauj. (40) Twelve bazaars of yours I sacked, and drove from before me all the elephants. Had you been so strong¹³ as you say, Rājā, quickly would you have turned me back.

Jaichand.—I but jested with you, my son, and you became vexed.

With a laugh Ūdal replied,—Rājā, hear my words. Jest and smile with your mistresses,¹⁴ that eat from your hand. (45) Why jest and smile with me who can break iron with my teeth?

Jaichand.—At the full moon of Kārtik I went to bathe at Kālinjar; whilst returning I smote Mahōbā. Just then, my hero Ūdal, where were you, while it was I that was plundering twelve bazaars?¹⁵

Ālhā.—Quite true. You had gone to bathe at the full moon of Kārtik, and whilst returning you smote Mahōbā.¹⁶ I was hunting on the preserves when a courier brought

³ Manawā, = invitation, summons.

⁴ Matāy = intoxicated, hence, fed up, overfed; ghurā-ghar = stable; ṛūṛ = having broken.

⁵ Li When I wish to slay you, you are remembering.

⁶ These are figurative ways of threatening revenge. Each insult shall be avenged fourfold.

⁷ Ālhā conquered Gānjar (said to be the same as Gujarat) for Jaichand. The latter now reproaches him with presuming on his deeds.

⁸ Ālhā originally served Parmāl, the Chandēl, of Mahōbā. The latter expelled him at the instigation of Mahila, and he took refuge with Jaichand.

⁹ Ālhā's younger brother.

¹⁰ Ūdal, owing to his fiery nature, was known as Bagh-ūdal, Tiger Ūdal. He challenges the world to a tiger fight of tooth and nail.

¹¹ Bērī lies in the Doab of the Betwa and the Jamnā, close to their confluence between the Districts of Jalaun and Hamirpur. Bijahtā is in Hamirpur on the banks of the Betwa.

¹² Dā = time. So lauṭat dā (l. 40) at the time of returning.

¹³ Literally, two-armed.

¹⁴ Bisawā = vēśyā.

¹⁵ Manawā = a hero. Ālhā and Ūdal were at this time in the service of Parmāl of Mahōbā.

¹⁶ Ālāṭy = anḥāy = nahāy.

me word. (50) When I returned to Mahōbā then busily was plied the naked steel. When you fled from the field then I captured the horse Manōrath; if you believe me not, Rājā, I can send now for the horse.

Jaichand.—You may go to Mahōbā. Ask what you will to-day, and I will grant it.

Ālhā.—Your goods, O Rājā, I desire not; nor do I desire store of wealth. (55) Let Prince Lākhan be given to me, that he may aid me at the river.

(The King gives help worthy of Alexander the Great to Ālhā.)

With 100,000 horse he gave Lākhan, with 125,000 Rāy-pāl; and when he gave his son Gulālan, with him he gave 52,000 horse.¹ Ālhā paid his respects; when the army was ready, he ordered the march from Kanauj, and a numberless² host went forth.

(60) The camp was pitched in Kurhaṭ; Jagnāik with clasped hands prayed;³ 'they have robbed my horse's armour; Ālhā Banāphar, have it brought back.' Then Ālhā took in his hand his pen-box and wrote an order. 'All and every I salute; to the Rājā my best respects. As you are Lākhan's relative, even so be mine. (65) Send back the horse's armour; why stir up a quarrel?'

The Answer.—To thee and to thy grandfather defiance; I challenge the Chandēl to do his worst.⁴ The horse's armour I will not return, though the fight should last day and night.

Ūdal sends a second letter.—All and each I salute, to the Rājā my best respects. Send back the horse armour, for this armour belongs to the Chandēl. (70) Such armour has no man, three lākhs and a half it is worth. If you do not send the armour quickly, come out and fight in the open.⁵

Then sounded the Rājā's battle drums and the rattle of his drums was heard. In front were yoked the guns, in the rear the rockets. All the forces of the Rājā advanced in the open field. (75) The attack was made on Ūdal: right well they plied the sword. Young men⁶ fell in thousands, horses fell without number. Elephants fell in the field, and fine was the stream of gore that flowed. The Rājā fled from the field; Ūdal took him and pinioned him.⁷ When they brought the Rājā before Ālhā, (80) he clasped the palms of his hands and begged of Ālhā, 'Son, let me go with you?'

Then they marched from Kurhaṭ, and came opposite the river (Jamnā). For some days they travelled along the roads, and then reached the river Betwā.⁸ Prithirāj heard the news and occupied forty-two landing places. The fight with Prithirāj began; in blind fury they plied their arms.⁹ (85) Young men fell in thousands, horses fell without number. Elephants fell in the field, and fine was the stream of gore that flowed.¹⁰

¹ Rāy-pāl and Gulālan were the elder and younger sons of Jaichand. Lākhan, we have seen, was his nephew.

² Gāy-gūwār is said to be an old word meaning 'without number.' Gāy-gowāl, the cowherd, is, however, one of the titles of Ālhā.

³ Kurhaṭ was on the Kanauj, or northern, side of the Jamnā. When Jagnāik was on his way to Kanauj to summon Ālhā he halted here. Its king, Rāy-bhān, entreated him hospitably, but kept the rich armour which adorned his horse.

⁴ Chunauṭi and talāk, both mean 'defiance'

⁵ Malā maidān, literally, the plain of heroes (mall), is one of the stock phrases of the cycle for a battlefield.

⁶ Here we have one of the stock descriptions of a battle, repeated over and over again in the cycle in identical words. It occurs again ten lines lower down. As-rār means countless = bāshumār.

⁷ Musuk bāndh-nā, to tie the elbows behind the back.

⁸ The river Betwa, for the greater part of its lower course, forms the boundary between the districts of Hamirpur and Jalaun. Ural, where the final struggle between the Chandēls, aided by Ālhā's forces, and Prithirāj took place, is the Headquarters station of the latter district and is some eight or ten miles from the left bank of the Betwa.

⁹ Alā = blind, unconscious, dāundh = mist before the eyes.

¹⁰ See above, verse 76.

Slain was the son of Miyān Tālhan, where the sword was busily plied. Ūdal heard the news; he flew upwards with his horse¹ and so reached the thick of the fight,² and exacted vengeance for the Sayyid. (90) He slew the son of Prithirāj, the leader of all the champions. Prithirāj pressed hard; then busily were weapons plied. Ālhā's forces turned back, and all the champions fled; then Lākhan stayed their flight, and busily were weapons plied. The Prince slew seven hundred, the Chauhāns pressed hard (95); when Chaurā sought to seize the prince, fourteen hundred Chauhāns were cut down.³ Ālhā's force fled. Then the Princess Māchhil saw and came;⁴ she mocked at Ūdal and said, 'Brother, whither are you fleeing?'

Māchhil.—Give me the dagger from your belt, your shield and sword or spear; a Cutch horse, pure in breed among a hundred thousand. (100) You fear to die,—then don the garb of women; paint your eyes with black powder and part your hair with pearls. Turn, Brother Uday-rāj,⁵ turn and fight, or I must lead and rally the host.

The foremost warrior of Ganjār was cheering on his infantry;⁶ Rāy-bhān of Kurhat was dealing blows to the elephants; (105) Bachhrāj was giving Gujarāt to feed the vultures;⁷ Dasahar on the banks of the Bāgain set flowing a river of blood;⁸ and Jagnāik said to Ālhā, 'Of your house who ever fled?'⁹

On hearing the words of Jagnāik, the Banāphar came forth from the crowd, as the cobra comes forth from her hole with expanded hood.¹⁰ The company moved forward to where Prince Lākhan lay, and, seeing Ūdal approach, Chaurā brandished Malkhā's shield.¹¹

² Murcha or morchā, here=a place of contest, an arena. It usually means an entrenchment or picket. Compare specimen IV, verse 115.

³ Chaurā or Chaurā was the son of Dasrāj by an Ahīr woman, and consequently half-brother of Ālhā and Ūdal: on his birth he was exposed in the river like Moses, and was picked up and brought to Prithirāj Chauhān who reared the child, and when he grew up appointed him to a command in his army. He was hence fighting against his own kith and kin.

⁴ Māchhil or Māchhlavati was the daughter of Rāgho Māchh of Hardwar, and the wife of Ālhā. According to another legend it was Diwalā, Ālhā's mother, who uttered this remonstrance, the most celebrated passage in the whole cycle. The remaining lines are said to be taken from Chand's poem.

⁵ i.e. Ūdal.

⁶ The three chiefs of Ganjar, Hirsingh Dēo, Birsingh Dēo, and Pūran Dēo, who had previously been conquered by Ālhā, accompanied him from Kanauj.

¹⁰ Sēt=a snake's hole.

BUNDĒLĪ (BANĀPHARĪ) DIALECT.

(DISTRICT, HAMIRPUR.)

SPECIMEN IV.

TRANSLATION.

Introductory Couplet.—As thou Sarasvatī granted to the cuckoo the power of song, and to the bee to hum melodiously ; so, Sarasvatī, grant thou unto me such melody, that I may sing the story of the Banāphar.

The Narrative.—Scene.—A well at Delhi.—Crowded were the water-stairs of Samhar fort ; all the fair friends were drawing water.¹ One cries, ‘ see, see, my friends, whence comes this array ? ’ (5) Some think the traveller is from the south-east, some say he is from the west,² but Chaurā’s sprightly bride, lord Chaurā’s spouse,³ at the well gave answer, ‘ hear my words, O my friends. My lord it is who comes, riding on a single-tusker.⁴ With her golden pitcher on her head from the well she darted forth ; (10) with such dainty steps ran she, her foot touched not the earth, and in the space of a minute or two she arrived under the gate. With clasped palms she spake to Chaurā, waving over him her two hands in welcome.⁵ ‘ Tell me,’ cried she, ‘ the secret, how was the sword wielded at Uraī ? ’⁶

Chaurā.—How can I tell it at the door ? Nothing can be said by me. (15) A very tiger was Varmānand, seizing and devouring all our champions.⁷ Twelve sons (of the king) were slaughtered by him, thirteen sons-in-law were slain ; on the broad plain of Uraī countless women were made widows.⁸ Then the king gave me the order, and I smote Varmā Chandēl.

This much the woman heard, and ran full speed to the palace-square ; (20) to Bēlā’s high raised upper chamber she ascended with hasty steps.⁹ The king’s daughter was sleeping, and she plucked her sheet (to awaken her).

² Aggim = agni-kṣn. Dahār is a ‘ wayfare.’

³ Regarding Chaurā see specimen III, verse 95, note. Nag-nāchan is ‘ clever,’ ‘ lively,’ ‘ troublesome ’ = chañchāl

⁴ Kanthā = husband. The single-tusker was, of course, an elephant.

⁵ Jwārai = jōrai : gaduliyā = the palm of the hand. chāwar kar’nā is to wave (the hands) as a chowry is waved.

⁸ Literally, in the earth (mār or marawā = māṣī) of (the plain which was) sixty-four (lāṣ wide).

⁹ Nāg’war = an upper room : lāt = foot.

Chaurā's wife.—Your gay red robe you must now give up, your bangles you must break. Your husband has fallen in Uraī; sister, your widowhood has come.¹

Bēlā.—Avaunt! Out with you into the palace! Mean wretch! Hear my words.²
(25) My husband is still a youth, and will be sporting with his comrades.

Chaurā's wife.—With hopes of his youth are you deluded. Sister, hear my words. For he it was who slew twelve grown up heroes,³ and smote down thirteen of the king's sons-in-law; and in the broad plain of Uraī he made countless women widows.⁴ If you still believe me not, go and ask, for your hero (brother) has arrived. (30) Chaurā now gives audience, and splendid is the courtly throng.⁵

Bēlā.—The city of Mahōbā I saw not, I saw not Kīrat's lake; Queen Padminī have I never seen, I have not worshipped Maniyā Dēo.⁶ From my feet the crimson stain⁷ has not departed, nor is my bridal garment soiled: it was not meet that you, Chaurā-man, should make me a helpless widow. (35) My curse upon you, Chaurā-man, may you be burnt to ashes.

Then Chaurā gave answer and said, 'Bēlā, hear my words. Words of ill-omen are you speaking in public, but I can say nothing.⁸ God made the victory mine, how then do you this day take it ill. I can make black white, and white black; in Samhar a third share is mine. (40) Prithirāj has given me the order,—I will seize and bring the Lady Padminī.'⁹

Then Bēlā gave answer, 'Chaurā, hear my voice. Because of smiting a boy you speak big swelling words; but my husband's mother you shall never seize, till Delhi's every lamp be quenched.'

Then Chaurā gave answer, 'Bēlā, hear my words. (45) I gave orders to Rāmā saying, "Friend, hear my words."¹⁰ Brahmanā has fallen in Uraī, the Banāphar Ālhā attends him; Mahōbā's Rājā is woman-hearted,¹¹ go, seize and bring the Lady Padminī. Let not Pithaurā know of this,¹² nor the pure Ballār. By Kālpī's ghaut go forth, seize and bring the Lady Padminī.''

(50) With a mocking laugh quoth Bēlā, 'Friend, hear my words. Tigers Parmāl has nurtured, underground he keeps them. Parmāl at any time has but to raise his finger, and they will rend and slay.'

² Dhar is what one says in driving away a dog. Dud-kārō is an interjection meaning 'out of this'. Compare Hindi duṭānā, to rebuke. Kam-jātin = of low caste (fem.).

³ I.e. He is no longer a boy, as you fancy, for he has been able to slay all these full-grown men.

⁴ Dēs kai, literally, (widows) of the land. Kai is feminine.

⁵ Ar'jangī = large, great, hence, magnificent.

⁶ Brahmanjit being but a youth, he had not yet taken his bride to his own home. The Kīrat Sāgar is still a clear, deep, and spacious sheet of water at Mahōbā. It was dug by Kirtti Varman (1065-1085 A.D.). Padminī was one of the titles of Malnā Dēvi, Parmāl's Queen. The temple of Maniyā Dēo was one of the glories of Mahōbā. It exists to the present day, but has been partially renovated.

⁷ Which was applied at the time of her wedding.

⁸ Budālāti, here and elsewhere for bōl'āti.

Gwārā or gārā = the Hindi athāṭī, an assembly room.

⁹ Parmāl's Queen.

¹⁰ Yā means 'this person,' that is, the speaker.

Rāmā is Rāmāpatī of Gwalior. Kākā, uncle, is here merely a term of friendly address.

¹¹ Myāhar = mēharā.

¹² For Chaurā should have gone himself. Pithaurā is Prithirāj. Ballār is a name of Ālhā. Kālpī is north-east of Uraī, on the bank of the Jamnā.

Chaurā orders Rāmāpati.—The best of horses take, and take picked riders, and at the hour of midnight pass over to the further bank.

Having heard this much Bēlā uttered a loud scream, 'Handmaid, handmaid,' she cried, 'handmaid, hear my words. Go straightway to the palace, and bring me my writing bundle.¹ The pen and inkstand she took in her hand, and took up the paper.² She gave salutation³ to all the warriors, and to Ūdal reverent greeting. (60) 'Has the horse Benduliyā⁴ grown old? Or has Rājā Parmāl died? I ask of thee, O Ūdal, heed thou well my words. Whilst thou, O tiger, livest, wilt thou become a laughing stock in Mahōbā? Passing by Kālpī ghaut Rāmāpati of Gwalior is coming. See that at the ghaut Rāmā escape not, though he should assume seven forms.'

(65) Then stout Princess Bēlā called a runner and said, 'I shall set apart and grant you lands⁵ to enjoy unhindered all your life; but let not Chaurā know of this, nor let Rāmāpati of Gwalior know. Only tell the news to Ūdal that Rāmā of Gwalior is coming.'

He cleans his saddle and binds it on the camel, and quickly mounts.⁶ (70) With his heel he urges her on, flying like the wind.⁷ By night running and by day speeding, midway he makes no halt. Thus in a few days' space, with a cloud of dust flying, he reaches Uraī. A tent with long walls was pitched, the summit of which soared to heaven.⁸ An enclosure surrounded a pavilion of Deccan work, with fringes attached to its four sides.⁹ (75) For the space of a mile floor-clothes are spread, of cushions there were some fifteen hundred, where the people sat cross-legged and touching each other, the shields covered the earth as blades of grass. Apart sat Karchulī and Kachhwāhā, Sōngar and Dhār Pāwār.¹⁰ There sat the Rājput clan by clan reclining on cushions. Bemused were they from the opium they had eaten, men who without blows would not change their purpose. (80) Each man with his sacred sword upon his thigh, like a black snake coiled.

Bēlā's camel-courier alighted on the tented field. Jumping down from the camel he alighted, adjusting his shield and sword,¹¹ paid his respects before the seat of the chief, and presented his orders. While opening the folded letter and looking at the black characters,¹² (85) Ūdal burned as a coal and became like dark death upon his throne.

'Ḍiriyā, Ḍiriyā,' he shouted, 'Ḍiriyā, hear my words. Instantly call for Ālhā, quickly give him notice.'¹³

¹ A basta is any wrapper, and, especially, the bundle of writing materials, which are kept tied up in a cloth.

² A duwāt is a portable case containing reed, pens, and rags sodden in ink. The paper is held in the left hand while writing.

³ Literally, headed the letter with 'Rām, Rām.' Sāūt = Sāwant.

⁴ The name of Ūdal's horse.

⁵ Jāgīras = jāgīr.

⁶ Ṭhāṭk means 'to beat,' 'dust,' 'clean.' Jahāj is a camel saddle-pad; sāṭ'ni or sāṭ'ni = a she-camel.

⁷ Yārā = a dig of the heel; washar = the wind.

⁸ A srāchā is the canvas side, or qanāt, of a tent; the chāḍ'wā is the ornamental top of a tent pole. In Hindī srāchā is a single-pole tent.

⁹ A dāw'ni is a canopy-tent, or shāmīyāna. Here commences one of the stock descriptions. Compare specimen III, v. 9.

¹⁰ These are all names of Rājput tribes. Each tribe sat apart from the others in order of precedence.

¹¹ Char'pāṭ—to adjust, put to rights.

¹³ Ḍiriyā was the groom of Ūdal's horse Benduliyā.

Diriyā calls Ālhā.—‘Come on, come on, O thunderbolt of war, your younger brother calls you.’¹ Straightway came forth (Ālhā) the thunderbolt and rushed into the tent.² (90) Not a minute, not a second, passed, before he arrived in the tent. He then called out to Ūdal, ‘Ūdal, hear my words. Are you troubled with your neighbour on the border,³ or has the Chauhān pressed you hard? I ask of you, O Ūdal, why have you sent for me at the point of noon?’

Ūdal.—A stratagem has Chaurā planned; Rāmā he has made ready, (95) who is coming by the pass of Jalaun to seize the Lady Padminī.

Then gave answer Ālhā, ‘Ūdal, hear my words. The best of horses take, and well-chosen horsemen.⁴ Let not Rāmā escape on the roads; cut off his head and bring away the trophy.’

Ūdal.—Whomsoever of the young men I may ask for in this tent, give me as I ask. (100) Then gave answer Ālhā, ‘Ūdal, hear my words. Whatsoever you ask for in this tent, I shall grant your prayer.’

Ūdal.—Sihā of Siraunjā give me, Prince Lākhan of Kanauj, Alī Alāwar and Kālē Khān, with Jaṛī Bēg and Sultān, and Bahubalī, the son of the Sayyid, whom Ālhā himself for a moment fears.⁵ (105) (Men these were who could eat a maund of flour each, and would each eat an entire goat.⁶ And the leaf dish on which their morning snack was placed would crumble to dust.) Give me Varṇā’s Ahīr Matauwā,—All these make ready for me, and I shall learn the truth about Rāmā; he of Gwalior shall not escape.⁷

Then Ālhā gave order saying: ‘Ūdal, hear my words. (110) Whomsoever you asked for in the tent, all have I granted to you. Only leave behind my brother of Sirsā, and Miyān Tālhan of Benares.⁸ Go on your way, Ūdal, my son, he of Gwalior must not escape.’

Together the men rushed forth and dashed along the roads, and in a few days’ space arrived at the river. (115) Ūdal threw out his pickets in the battlefield by the river⁹ and at the hour of eight o’clock Rāmāpati arrived. When Ūdal cried aloud and said: ‘Young man, hear my words. In what region did your birth occur? Where did you assume mortal form?¹⁰ I ask of you, my fine fellow, to what country are you going?’

(120) Then Rāmā planned a stratagem, and spake words of guile. ‘In the west country was I born, and there I assumed mortal form. A horse merchant I am, to sell horses am I going. I have heard of a market for horses, to sell a horse am I going to Mahōbā.’

Then Ūdal cried aloud, ‘Merchant, hear my words. (125) At dawn, even at break of day, when the chariot of the sun comes forth, I shall make way for you; after that, if you please, go on to Mahōbā.’

² Turāy, broke into the tent.

³ Dāṛā—the frontier country. Dāṛaiyā is an inhabitant of the same.

⁴ Chhārā—picked, selected.

⁵ Sihā was the son of Ālhā’s sister; Lākhan was nephew of Jaichand, King of Kanauj. The others were all sons of Sayyid Tālhan Miyān of Benares.

⁶ Sar'much = samūchā.

⁷ The root dār or dyār is explained as meaning ‘to learn.’

⁹ Mōrchā, usually entrenchments, here means outposts or pickets. Compare specimen III, verse 89

¹⁰ Disantar = dāṇantar: jal'mau = janma.

With angry talk they wrangled, and fierce waxed the war of words. Right well did Ūdal admonish, but he of Gwalior heeded not. Each learned to know the other in the battlefield by the river.

(130) With a mocking laugh spake Ūdal, 'Uncle, hear my words. Because of smiting one boy, you have come and planned such a scheme.'

With a mocking laugh spake Rāmā, 'Ūdal, hear my words. You may speak a million times, but I shall not heed, and will seize and bring away the Lady Padminī.'

On hearing these words, Ūdal gnawed his palm (in rage and cried),¹ (135) 'To the defiance, and to Swāmīsur, from whom sprung Pithaurā Rāy.² East and west, and north and south, were ravaged the four regions; east and west, and north and south, was heard the tramp of Bendulā's hoofs. As far as Jagannāth and Ghurmuhā did I smite; I held the fair at Baṭṭesar; Rāmēsar of Sētubandh I smote, even unto Lankā did I take tribute.³ (140) The stream of the Narbada I banked up, so that it turned and flowed westwards.⁴ If to such a man's mother⁵ you should speak as you have done, then were it a shame for me to live.'

The angry talk increased, and fierce waxed the war of words. The sacred blade was drawn at the river side, in a torrent of battle was plied the sword.⁶ Under the scimitar-blows gushed out jets of blood, the swords raised the dust.⁷

(145) Fighting elephants as they were cut down fell to the earth; troops of horses fell;⁸ there were riders without arms, and horses without noses;⁹ elephants lost their trunks, the host yelled in agony.¹⁰ The heads which were wont to be tied with saffron turbans, and to be dressed with attar and sweet oil,¹¹ those very heads were rolling on the earth, while shield and sword clashed all around. (150) During the slaughter of the night day appeared, and during the day's fighting evening came on.

Rāmāpati held to every inch of ground, but his pickets that were stationed there gave way.¹² Urging on his elephant he came out into the forefront of the battlefield.

Rāmāpati.—A trumpery servant who would slay, and so bring together the sins of a lifetime?¹³ If there be my match in the ranks of Mahōbā, let him come forward in the battlefield.¹⁴ (155) Urging on Bendulā, Ālhā's younger brother came to the front.

² Somēśvara was the name of Prithūrāy's (Pithaurā's) father. He ruled at Ajmer.

³ Jagannāth is the temple of Puri in Orissa. Ghurmuhā is said to be a fabulous country where the people have horse's faces. Baṭṭesar is the well-known town in Agia district, famous for its horse-fur. Sētubandh is the line of reefs joining Cape Comorin to Ceylon. At Cape Comorin there is a temple of Śiva Mahēśvara. Lankā is Ceylon.

⁴ I do not know to what legend this refers

⁵ I.e. Padminī. She was really his maternal aunt. Jalanī for jananī

⁶ Regarding the use of the name Bhagavatī for a sword, see note to specimen III, verse 14. Uir is a torrent, a stream. Compare verse 169

⁸ Chintā is a kind of fighting elephant. Summār = companies, rows.

⁹ Thubharī = a snout, a face.

¹⁰ Maṅgal is explained as a kind of elephant, and bhasūṅgar as his trunk. Karāḥ is a cry of pain.

¹¹ Kusamahanī is a turban dyed red with saffron (kusum).

¹² Here ghāḍī = morchā.

¹³ 'A trumpery servant' is literally 'a servant of a seer', i.e. one whose wages is only a seer of food a day. Bīṛhawai = collects; dwākkh = dōsh.

¹⁴ Bīṛāl = match, equal

Ūdal.—Here am I, the leader of this camp, and of this host the chief.¹ I am your match in the ranks of Mahōbā, therefore am I come forward in the battlefield.

Looking at him from heel to head, (Rāmā said) ‘Son Ūdal, hear my words. Send your elder brother to the front, who may be able to withstand my steel.’

(160) With a mocking laugh spake Ūdal, ‘Uncle, hear my words. One elder brother is the Thunderbolt of War, who takes not his sword in his hand.² The second elder brother of mine was he of Sirsā, whose head you cut off and carried away.³ Now I am fully-grown, I am the eldest, able to withstand your steel.’

When Rāmā gave answer unto him, ‘Son Ūdal, hear my words. (165) Take the first cast of the javelin, if so be that you have any desire for life left in you.’⁴

Then gave answer Ūdal, ‘Uncle, hear my words. From your darts I shall escape. My turn comes after yours.’

Brandishing the javelin Sanīchar, and resting on the front of the howdah,⁵ Rāmā poured blows on his forehead, but Bēlā ever turned the point.⁶ (170) Ūdal advanced to make his salute, with a cloud of dust flying behind him.⁷ The countenance of Rāmā withered, his face became dim, his jaws fell.⁸

Rāmāpati.—As a boy, I never missed my cast with a straw arrow, but now at the river side I have missed my cast with the javelin.⁹ An evil day has come for Delhi, when my weapon has played me false.¹⁰ A second bar of iron he brandished, a hard nut for an enemy to crack;¹¹ (175) he intended to strike on the chest, but Ūdal had learned from jugglers the art of fence.¹² Forceibly he smote with the bar, but Ūdal warded it off with his shield.

When again Ūdal cried, ‘Uncle, hear my words. After your turn was over, you gave a second blow, the third turn is mine.¹³ Let us fence before the host (each in his turn) as a well is worked by the seekers for water.’¹⁴ (180) Then gave Rāmā answer, ‘Ūdal, hear my words. What, have you conned a potent charm, or learned how to avert a dart?¹⁵ Right well I smote you at the river side, yet not a wound appeared on your body.’

Ūdal.—I have not conned a potent charm, nor have I learned to avert a dart. Your darts are of raw iron, and you have not paid the smith his price. (185) The son of a low-

¹ Ī dal, this host, is also a play on the name of Ālhā's son, Ī dal or Indal.

² This is Ālhā. He had a magic sword which none could withstand, and which, in the Rājput sense of fair play, he only used on extreme occasions.

³ This is Malkhān. See note to verse 111 above.

⁵ Sanīchar, or Saturn, was the name of his javelin. Rāmā, of course, was on an elephant. Paṭiyā is the front of the howdah. Yār = ēr, a rest, a support.

⁶ Bēlā was said to possess the powers of a witch. Barakāy = warding off.

⁷ Agāhan = aguman, in front.

⁸ Jhāwār = dimmed.

⁹ Bār = a boy, a child. Sarāī is a toy arrow made of sarpat, a kind of reed-grass. Huchāy = I missed.

¹⁰ Udasā = an unlucky or evil day.

¹¹ Sābar = a crowbar, a bar of iron. The second half of the line is literally, ‘having given the boiled rice of adamant.’ The idea is that the bar was so hard that adamant was soft as boiled rice in comparison with it.

¹² Here again we have a foreign word tajwīz treated as a verb.

¹³ Usarī, lit. ‘completed.’

¹⁴ Khiliyāī is from the root khāl, with the ē shortened to i as it is in the antepenultimate.

¹⁵ Kurawā is the name of a charm: the root barār = to ward off (by magical means or otherwise).

born mother are you, a good-for-nothing was your father.¹ In your childhood you got no butter to eat, in your wrist there is no strength.² Withstand my darts, which were made by order of Rājā Parmāl; if from my darts you do escape, then you may go home and anew celebrate your birth.³

Ūdal then brought his horse to a distance, and laying on Mother Earth the burden of his task (exclaimed),⁴ (190) 'O Mighty God, Maniyā Dēo, O Honour of the Chandēlā Rājā. O Mother Bēlā, at my right hand be thou, the spouse of Prince Brahmajit.'

He on the one side from his hand discharged the dart, and it lodged in his rival's chest.⁵ On the other side fell Rāmā on the field, where the double blow had lighted.⁶ The enemy fled, a disordered rabble, none stopped to tie his loosened turban.⁷

² Kihūchā = pahūchā. Nihāy is the negative verb substantive.

³ The chhāṭhī is the feast held on the sixth day after the birth of a child. The meaning is that if Rāmāpati does escape, he may consider that he has passed through death and been born again.

⁵ Yā = here, opposed to hwā, there. Thaṭhān, to beat, smite.

⁶ Duhlā = double. The blow was double, as it was both natural and supernatural.

KUNDRĪ OF HAMIRPUR.

Kundrī is spoken in the extreme north-east of the Hamirpur district, on the left bank of the river Ken, by some 11,000 people. It is also spoken on the right bank of the same river, in the Banda district. Immediately to its north lies the Tirhārī of the southern bank of the Jumna, which is a mixture of Baghēli and Bundēli, and which has been described under the head of Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 132 ff.). Kundrī is a similar mixture, but it differs on the two sides of the Ken. On the right, or east, side like the other dialects used in Banda, it is based on Baghēli and is mixed with Bundēli. An account of this form of Kundrī will be found in Vol. VI, pp. 152 ff. On the left, or west, bank of the Ken, it is much more influenced by the Bundēli spoken in the rest of Hamirpur, and is based on that dialect, with a mixture of Baghēli. As a whole, Kundrī may be considered to be an extension of Tirhārī towards the south up the lower course of the Ken.

The nature of this broken dialect will be evident from the first few sentences of the Parable of the Prodigal Son given below. It will be seen that the verbs follow Bundēli in the formation and use of the past tense, except in the case of rahaĩ, were, which is Baghēli. On the other hand the postpositions, māĩ, in, and kā, to, are Baghēli, and so is the form mwārō, mine, although the termination ō is Bundēli. The general structure of the sentences is throughout pure Bundēli, with the typical use of the agent case before the past tenses of transitive verbs, which is unknown to Baghēli. The word lām^orō for 'son' may be noted.

NIBHAṬṬĀ OF JALAUN.

Although the main language of Jalaun is good Bundēli in the east corner of that district, on the south bank of the Jamua, we find a dialect locally known as Nibhaṭṭā, which is a continuation of the Tirhārī of Hamirpur, found along the banks of the same river. It is spoken by about 10,200 people.

Like Tirhārī this riverain dialect is a mixture of Baghēli and Bundēli. Tirhārī is certainly based on the former of these tongues, but Nibhaṭṭā, which, being further west, is more in the Bundēli country, might fairly be classed with either. A few lines of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will be a sufficient example. Note how the language struggles between two idioms. There are Baghēli past tenses like kahasi, he said, dihis, he gave, which require the subject in the nominative case, and yet here it is (as in Bundēli) in the case of the Agent. Alongside of these Baghēli forms note the pure Bundēli hatē, they were.

Nibhaṭṭā is the last of these broken dialects which we meet as we go west.

Besides this Baghēli infection, traces are also to be seen of the Kanauji, spoken in Cawnpore on the other side of the river. Such is wā-nē, by him.

BHADAURĪ OR TŌWARGARĪ.

The head-quarters of the Bhadāwar Rajputs consist of the country on both sides of the river Chambal, where it forms the northern boundary of the State of Gwalior. Here also, in the Tŏwargarh District of Gwalior, are the head-quarters of the Tōmar Rajputs. The language spoken in this tract is known as Bhadaurī or (in Tŏwargarh) Tŏwargarhī. Under whichever name it is known it is the same,—viz. a form of Bundēlī which is considerably mixed with the Braj Bhākhā spoken in Agra. It varies slightly from place to place, being naturally more and more infected with Braj as we go north.

The country in which Bhadaurī is spoken may be described as follows. It is spoken over nearly the whole of the main portion of the Gwalior State. It thus extends over a much larger tract than the Bhadāwar country proper. It runs down the centre of the State from the Chambal to the border of the old Guna Agency, having Braj Bhākhā and Harauṭi to its west, and Pāwārī Bundēlī to its east. To the south it merges into Mālwi. In Agra it is spoken in the south of the district in the tract bordering on the Chambal. In Mainpurī it has a few speakers in the Kharka tract on the banks of the Jamna to the south-west of the District. In Etawah it is spoken in the tract between the Jamna and the Chambal, and across the latter river. The number of speakers is roughly estimated as follows :—

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|----------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|------------------|
| Gwalior | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 1,000,000 |
| Agra | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 250,000 |
| Mainpurī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 8,000 |
| Etawah | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 55,000 |
| TOTAL | | | | | | | | | | . | 1,313,000 |

It will be sufficient to give specimens from Gwalior and Agra. The Bhadaurī of the other two districts does not differ. It may be mentioned that Bhadaurī is not spoken in Jalaun, although the dialect was wrongly entered in the Rough List of Languages spoken in that district. The so-called Bhadaurī of Jalaun is ordinary Bundēlī.

The following account of the dialect is based on the specimens.

The system of pronunciation fluctuates. Au occurs as often as ō, and ai, as ē. In the same sentence we often find the same word spelt both ways, e.g. mārō and mārau. As in the Bundēlī of Jalaun we meet curious changes of other vowels, e.g. bauhat, many, for bahut (cf. Jalaun buhāt) ; rehat for rahat, remaining ; kēh for kahi, having said.

In the case of consonants, there is a strong tendency to contraction, as in jāntu, knowing, for jān^otu. This is specially noticeable in the case of the letter r. For instance—

|---|------------------|
| Instead of | we have |
| chākaran , servants | chākann . |
| par^odēs , a far country | paddēs . |
| barisan , years | bassan . |
| suratī , memory | sutti . |
| mār^onau , to strike | mānnau . |
| mār^otu , striking | māttu . |
| kar^otu , doing | kattu . |

In the case of nouns strong forms usually end in au or ō, e.g. sahārau, help. The oblique form as usual ends in ē. As elsewhere in Bundēli, strong nouns of relationship and some others end in ā, which is not changed in the oblique singular or nominative plural. Thus we have—

| Nom. Sing. | Obl. Sing. | Nom. Plur. | Obl. Plur. |
|----------------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|----------------------------|
| lar^akā , a son | lar^akā | lar^akā | lar^akan. |
| ghōrā , a horse | ghōra | ghōrā | ghōran. |

In one instance the oblique form in ē has a plural in ē̃. It is hamārē̃ (not hamārē) dō bachchā haĩ, we have two cubs.

The influence of Braj (or perhaps Kanauji) is noticeable in the optional employment of a weak termination, u, of nouns. Thus jwābu, an answer; māttu or mātta, striking; mattu, dying; kattu, doing; jāntu, knowing.

There is the usual instrumental singular in an, as in bhūkhan, by hunger. The post-position of the accusative-dative is kē̃ or kō̃. In other respects the declension follows standard Bundēli, due allowance being made for pronunciation.

In the pronouns, the influence of Braj has brought into use the form hō̃ or haũ for 'I,' as well as mē̃ or maĩ. So also, besides the usual Bundēli forms (tumārō and tumāō), we have tihārō, meaning 'thy' or 'your.' 'Me' is mōi, corresponding to standard Bundēli mōē. As in Jalaun, 'he' and 'she' are ba, obl. bā or bā̃, plural bē, obl. bin. 'This' is ja, ji or jē. Apayē is an oblique plural meaning 'own.'

The word for 'what' is the Braj kahā, obl. kāhē.

In verbs, we have the Braj haũ, I am, and (very common) hō, was. The initial h of the auxiliary verb is often dropped, so that we have forms like khāt-aĩ, they eat; khāti-au, you (fem.) eat; nā-ō, he was not; rēhat-ē, they were living; and dēt-yē (for dēt-ē), they were giving.

There is an interesting survival of an old neuter form in chāhaũ, instead of chāhau, it was wished (by him), i.e. he wished. In other respects the conjugation of the verb shows no divergencies from standard Bundēli, unless we consider as such manāmē̃ for manāwē̃, 'let us celebrate.'

The only other point to note is that ji is often used for the conjunction 'that' after verbs of saying, instead of ki, kē or kaĩ.

Once upon a time there was a jackal and his mate. One day they felt thirsty, and the she-jackal said to the jackal, 'come, let us drink water. Do you know any stories or not? There is a leopard's den, and if you know any stories, we will drink there. I am dying of thirst.' So they went on to the watering-place, and when they got there the she-jackal said, 'do you know any stories or not?' As she said this the leopard caught sight of both of them. Then said the jackal, 'I have forgotten everything.' Then said the she-jackal, 'why are you standing there? Take a drink and then make obeisance to our worthy uncle.' So the jackal drank, and when he was refreshed he turned to the leopard and politely wished him good morning. Then he turned to the she-jackal and said, 'you too take a drink, and then do you too make obeisance to him.' As soon as she was refreshed she said to the leopard, 'worthy uncle, come to our house. We have two cubs. This jackal says they are his, and I say they are mine. So come along and settle the dispute.' The leopard said to himself, 'here are two, and there are two cubs more. I shall eat them all up at once. This is just the thing that suits me.' So the three made off for the jackal's home. When they got there, the she-jackal said to the jackal, 'go inside and drag them out before the worthy uncle.' The jackal understood what her device was and went in, but out of fear of the leopard did not come out again. Then said the she-jackal, 'I'll go and bring the cubs myself,' and she also slipped inside, leaving the leopard standing alone by the entrance. When they were both safe at home, the she-jackal peeped out of her hole and said, 'worthy uncle, we have made up our dispute. He has taken one and I have taken the other.' So the leopard could only go back to his own den; while the jackals were safe and sound, having successfully got their drink by engaging the leopard in talk.

The following short folk-tale is in the Bhadauri of the District of Agra. It is almost the same as that of Gwalior. The Braj termination u is more common. Note the frequency with which contraction occurs. We have pajjā for par^ajā or prajā, subjects; khachohu for kharch, expenditure; pattu for par^atu, falling; and jātō for jāt-tō, was going. Note also the Braj kũ, the termination of the accusative-dative, and the Kanauji form thō, was.

Sūraj Nārāyan, the Sun-God, had a mother and a wife. He used to give half his money to his subjects and half for his household expenditure. What he gave was not enough for the expenses of his mother and her daughter-in-law, but was enough for the expenses of his subjects. So the wife said to the mother, 'go to your son, the Sun-God, and say, "give us enough to fill our bellies."' Then the Sun-God asked his mother, 'how do you eat?' She replied, 'the mother-in-law has to steal from the daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law has to steal from the mother-in-law. That is the way we eat.' The wife had followed her mother-in-law, and stood in a corner behind her while she and her son talked together. When she had heard what they said she went away. Then the two went home. They plastered the fireplace in order to cook, baked some bread, and, to their hearts' content, sat together, and ate bread out of the same dish till they were satisfied. Then they blessed the Sun-God.¹

The Sun-God visited his wife. He did it quite secretly. None of his subjects knew about it. Then his wife became pregnant, and in the ninth month a son was born. There was a scandal about this amongst his subjects. Then the Sun-God came home with great pomp. He came with a fully equipped army. His chariot stuck in the way. Then we all said, 'if this son has been begotten by the Sun-God, the chariot will move when he touches it.' In your and my opinion he was not the Sun-God's child. But the Sun-God knew in his heart that the boy was his son. The son came out of the house. He touched the chariot with his toe and it began to move. Then the Sun-God arrived at his own house. Great rejoicings took place, and loudly were hymns sung.

¹ Apparently the deity had increased the house-keeping allowance, but the story does not say so in so many words.

THE BROKEN DIALECTS OF THE SOUTH.

We have seen that Standard Bundēli is spoken in the districts of Saugor and Damoh of the Central Provinces, which lie on the Vindhyan table-land. South of them lies the Narbada Valley with its offshoots, including the districts of Mandla, Jabalpur, Narsinghpur, Hoshangabad and a part of Nimar. Mandla speaks Eastern Hindī, and so does Jabalpur, although the language of the latter district gradually merges into Bundēli as we go westwards. Narsinghpur and the greater part of Hoshangabad speak standard Bundēli, but the rest of Hoshangabad speaks Malvi and the part of Nimar, Nimādi. South of the Narbada Valley lies the Satpura table-land, including the districts (going from east to west) of Balaghat, Seoni, Chhindwara, and Betul. Balaghat speaks, in the main, a form of Marāṭhī and a number of broken dialects described under the head of Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 174 ff.) which are mixtures of Baghēli and the former language. The members of the Lōdhī tribe in that district, however, speak a mixture of Bundēli and Marāṭhī, which is dealt with here. Seoni, like Narsinghpur to its north-west, speaks standard Bundēli. Chhindwara, which is linguistically separated from the Bundēli of Hoshangabad by the Satpura range in which the languages are Gōṇḍī and Kūrkū, has a broken form of Bundēli in the centre of the district, and Marāṭhī in the south. There is no one standard dialect for the whole of central Chhindwara; each tribe seems to have a slightly varying form of speech, but they all closely resemble each other. Besides possessing a few local peculiarities, the Bundēli patois of Chhindwara is mainly remarkable for the large quantity of Hindōstānī words and idioms with which it is interlarded. West of Chhindwara lies Betul, of which the main dialects are a corrupt Mālwi and Marāṭhī.

South of the Satpura table-land lies the great Nagpur plain, of which the language is Marāṭhī. In the district of Nagpur, however, a number of tribes scattered over the whole area use a language which is locally known as 'Hindī.' An examination of the specimens which I have received shows that it is a broken mixture of Bundēli and Marāṭhī.

Finally, some members of the Kōshṭī tribe in Chhindwara, Chanda, Bhandara, and Berar and of the Kumbhār tribe in Chhindwara and Buldana, speak a dialect very similar to Nagpur 'Hindī.'

We thus get the following list of broken dialects of the south :—

THE BROKEN DIALECT OF THE BALAGHAT LŌDHĪS.

I have said above that Seoni is the south-eastern limit of Bundēlī. This must be taken with the reservation that a broken patois of Bundēlī is found in Balaghat, a district still further to the south-east.

In Balaghat there are three broken dialects spoken by cultivators who have immigrated into the district during the past few decades. These are Marārī, Pōwārī, and Lōdhī. The first two have already been dealt with under the head of Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 174 ff.). The Lōdhī dialect is spoken by about 18,600 people of that caste scattered over the west and centre of the district who have come originally from the country to the north. They speak a broken jargon which is a mixture of Hindōstānī, Dakhinī Hindōstānī, Marāṭhī, Baghēlī, and Bundēlī. Judging from the specimens which I have seen, Lōdhī is mainly based on the last mentioned dialect. I therefore class it here.

It would be a waste of time and paper to give complete specimens of this mixed jargon. The first few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will suffice. We have fragments of all the dialects mentioned above in this short passage. For instance, thē and mērā are Hindōstānī, mērē-kō is Dakhinī, ap'li, own, is Marāṭhī, ō, 'that,' is Baghēlī, and chukō, par̄yō, gayō are Bundēlī.

DIALECTS OF CENTRAL CHHINDWARA.

To the west of Seoni lies Chhindwara. This District consists of two portions, a northern and a southern. The northern, or Bālāghāt tract (distinct from the Balāghat district), consists of the hill country above the slopes of the Satpura Mountains, and the southern, or Zērghāt of the tract of lowland beneath them. The language of the Zērghāt is Marāṭhī. The Bālāghāt is a series of high table-lands, rising as we go north to the Mahadeo Hills. The languages spoken in these Hills do not concern us at present. They are spoken by Gōṇḍ and Kūrkūs. Between them and the Zērghāt, i.e. in the central part of the district, the language is a corrupt Bundēli.

At least eight different dialects, called respectively Baghēli, Bundēli, Kumbhārī, Gāoli, Rāghōbansī, Kirārī, Kōshṭī, and Pōwārī, were originally returned as spoken in Central Chhindwara. A reference to the specimens of what is called 'Baghēli' shows that it is not Baghēli at all, and that it scarcely differs from what is reported as Bundēli. There are only a few very minor variations. As for Kumbhārī, the Kumbhārs, or Potters, of Chhindwara are bilingual,—at least some of the specimens of their language are in the ordinary Bundēli of the district, and others are in Marāṭhī. Another explanation may be that some of them speak one language and some the other. For want of better information, I have classed the Kumbhārī spoken in Chhindwara under Bundēli. At the same time, a very similar form of Kumbhārī, also based on Bundēli, is spoken in Buldana in Berar, and hence the Kumbhār dialects as a whole are considered together at the end of this group.

From the account originally given of Gāoli, Rāghōbansī, and Kirārī, it was at the time concluded that they were most probably forms of Mālwi. An examination of the specimens since obtained will show that they are all merely impure Bundēli. Again, the 3,242 speakers of the Kōshṭī dialects, which are popularly believed to be a form of Marāṭhī, turn out to be speakers of mongrel mixtures of that language with Bundēli, the latter being the basis. Finally, 3,000 Pōwārs were originally reported as speaking a special dialect in Chhindwara. Further enquiry shows that they have no special dialect, but that they speak the ordinary Bundēli of the District.

We thus get the following figures for the Bundēli spoken in Chhindwara :—

Ordinary Bundēli of the District, viz. :—

| | | | | | | | | | | |
|-----------------------|---|-----|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---------|
| 'Baghēli' (so-called) | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 35,000 |

| Pōwārī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 3,000 |
| | | | | | | | | | | 121,500 |
| Gāoli | } | say | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 24,000 |
| Rāghōbansī | | | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | |
| Kirārī | | | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | |
| Kōshṭī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 8,242 |
| Kumbhārī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 4,400 |
| | | | | | | | | | | 153,142 |
| | | | | | | | | | | 153,142 |

The last five will be dealt with subsequently. I now proceed to consider the first three together, as being really one dialect. It is spoken by 121,500 people.

The dialect spoken in central Chhindwara varies from place to place and according to the castes of the people who use it. Besides having peculiarities of its own, the dialect is everywhere freely mixed with ordinary Hindōstānī. This is no doubt due to the fact that a large portion of the Aryan population claims to have come from Northern India. The mixture is a purely mechanical one. In one sentence we will find a Hindōstānī expression, and, in the next, the same idea expressed by a Bundēli one. For instance, the agent case of the third personal pronoun is sometimes the Hindōstānī us-nē, and sometimes the local Bundēli ō-nē or wō-nē. On the other hand, we find the suffix kō sometimes used, as in Hindōstānī, for the accusative-dative (as in rahan-kō chalō-guō, he went to live), and sometimes, as in Bundēli, for the genitive (as in tērō aur Bhag^owān-kō kasūr-wār, a sinner of (i.e. before) thee and God). In the specimen which follows there are numerous instances of nouns declined after the Hindōstānī method, and further attention will not be drawn to them.

The following peculiarities which are not due to Hindōstānī occur in the various Chhindwārā dialects. They have been collected from a number of different sources, and most (but not all) of them will be found in the specimen given below.

Nouns.—For the sign of the accusative-dative (besides the Hindōstānī kō) khũ, corresponding to the pure Bundēli khō, occurs; thus, mē-khũ, to me. We also find kha and khē. For the ablative-instrumental both sē and sa occur.

In the pronouns, the oblique forms of maĩ, I; taĩ, thou; and jō, this or who, are mē (not mō); tē (not tō); and jē (not jā) respectively. Thus, mē-khũ, to me; jē-khũ, accusative, which.

The pronoun of the third person is ō or wō (not bō), and its oblique form (besides the Hindōstānī one) is not bā but ō, wō, or uwō. The last form is common amongst Kurmīs.

All these pronouns form a dative in hē; thus, mēhē, to me; tēhē, to thee; jēhē, to whom, to this; ōhē, to him, to that. Sometimes the final vowel is nasalized, as in mēhẽ. This form corresponds to the Bundēli mōē, etc.

In verbs, the past tense of the verb substantive is usually hatō, but we also have hathō (especially among Kurmīs) (compare Dakhinī Hindōstānī athā) and thō (a Bundēli or Kanaui corruption of the Hindōstānī thā). We may note the usual Bundēli fondness for contractions, as in kahũ, for kah^ohũ, I will say. The past tense of dēn, to give, is daō or dēō. So lēn, to take.

We may also note that the word for ' (he or she) said ' is kahō, not the feminine kahē, as in standard Bundēli.

In other respects these dialects closely follow ordinary Bundēli.

The following extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will illustrate most of these peculiarities. I am indebted for it to Mr. L. N. Chowdhri. It is in the dialect used by women, and is an excellent example of the general language of the whole of central Chhindwara.

GĀOLĪ, RĀGHŌBANSĪ, AND KIRĀRĪ.

These are the dialects of the castes implied by their names. They are all reported from Chhindwara.

The number of speakers is estimated as follows :—

|----------------------|--------|
| Gāoli | 16,093 |
| Rāghōbansī | 3,114 |
| Kirārī | 4,750 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL, SAY | 24,000 |

The dialects spoken by them were originally classed in the Rough List of Languages spoken in Chhindwara District, as forms of Mālwi. As a matter of fact, they in no way differ from the ordinary broken Bundēlī of the district. This will be amply shown by a few lines of the version of the Parable in each. Of the three Rāghōbansī borrows most freely from Hindōstānī.

‘HINDĪ’ OF NAGPUR.

From the district of Nagpur, which lies immediately to the south of Chhindwara, and of which the main Aryan language is Marāṭhī, 105,900 people were returned as speaking ‘Hindī.’ These people are not confined to any particular locality but are scattered all over the district. They, or their ancestors, hailed originally from the north. This ‘Hindī’ was provisionally classed as a form of Mālwi. On further enquiry it appears that it is not a sufficiently distinct speech to be called a dialect in its proper sense. The specimens show that it is a broken form of Bundēli, like that of Chhindwara, but with a greater admixture of Marāṭhī. Indeed, owing to the influence of the schools of the district, which are, as a rule, Marāṭhī, that language is every day acquiring more and more influence, and will some day, no doubt, supersede the Bundēli element altogether.

The following specimen, consisting of a few lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, will illustrate the above remarks.

THE KOSHṬĪ DIALECTS.

The Kōshṭis or silk weavers of the Central Provinces numbered 137,891 in the Census of 1891. Of these some 12,000 were returned for this Survey as speaking special dialects. They were distributed as follows:—

Chhindwara—

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|----------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|-------|--------|
| Marāṭhī Kōshṭi | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 2,638 | |

| Bhandara | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 800 |
| | | | | | | | | | | <hr/> | |

The rest of the Kōshṭis were reported to speak ordinary Marāṭhī. With the exception of 604 in Chhindwara, all these 12,042 were said to speak a special dialect of that language. To them may be added 2,650 Kōshṭis of Berar, making a total of 14,692, who will be dealt with later on, together with Kumbhārī.

An examination of the specimens received from these localities shows that there is really no such thing as a special Kōshṭi dialect. What is meant is that these Kōshṭis speak a corrupt mixture of Bundēlī, Chhattīsgarhī, and Marāṭhī, of which the relative proportions of the constituents vary according to locality.

We have seen that the district of Chhindwara falls into two main tracts, the Bālāghāṭ or Up-land, in the north, of which the language is corrupt Bundēlī, and the Zērghāṭ or Low-land, to the south, which forms in reality a portion of the Nagpur and Berar Plain. The Kōshṭi dialect of the Bālāghāṭ is known as 'Hindī Kōshṭi' because it is more infected with Bundēlī (as might be expected), than the Kōshṭi dialect of the Zērghāṭ.

It would be a waste of space to treat this jargon seriously. I shall give only a few lines of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the 'Hindī Kōshṭi' of Chhindwara, and a short tale from Chanda, where the Marāṭhī element predominates.

The Kōshtī of Chanda is much more mixed with Marāṭhī. We may also note a sign of the dative (na) which appears to be borrowed from some dialect of Gujarātī. It may be mentioned that many of the silk weavers of the Central Provinces originally came from Gujarat.

I give a specimen of Kumbhārī which comes from Buldana. The Kōshṭī dialect is the same, and no specimen is required. Before doing so, I give a note on the Kumbhārī dialects generally.

THE KUMBHĀR DIALECTS.

It has been reported that the Kumbhārs of the Central Provinces and of Berar have a dialect of their own, which is called Kumbhārī. The specimens received do not bear this out. All that is shown is that some of the Kumbhārs of these provinces speak corrupt forms of the various local dialects of the localities which they inhabit. At the Census of 1891 the number of Kumbhārs reported as existing in the Central Provinces and Berar was as follows:—

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|--------------------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|-------|---|---------|
| Central Provinces | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 102,682 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | 125,147 |
| | | | | | | | | | TOTAL | | 125,147 |

For the Survey, the number of speakers of 'Kumbhāri' is as follows:—

| | | | | | | | | | | |

Of these, the Bhandara Kumbhārī is a corrupt Baghēli, and has been dealt with under that dialect of Eastern Hindī (Vol. VI, pp. 180 ff.). The Kumbhārī of Chanda is a corrupt Telugu, and cannot be considered here. The Kumbhārs of Akola have, it turns out, no special dialect. They speak the ordinary Warhādī of the district. There remain :—

| TOTAL | . | | | | | | | | | 4,980 |

Of the 4,400 Chhindwara Kumbhārs, some speak a corrupt Bundēli, and others a corrupt Marāṭhī. It is impossible to say how many speak each, and hence I perforce put the whole number under Bundēli. The Marāṭhī form of their dialect has been dealt with under the Marāṭhī of the Central Provinces (Vol. VII, p. 295).

The Bundēli form of the Chhindwara Kumbhārī is simply the broken Bundēli of the district, and needs no exemplification.

The Kumbhārī of Buldana is a corrupt mixture of Bundēli with Marāṭhī and traces of Gujarātī or Rājasthānī. As a specimen I give a portion of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. It will also suffice as a specimen of Berar Kōshṭī.

PAÑJĀBĪ.

The name 'Pañjābī' explains itself. It means the language of the Punjab. As will be seen immediately the name is not a good one, for Pañjābī is not by any means the only language spoken in that Province.

Pañjābī is the tongue of about 12½ millions of people, and is spoken over the greater part of the eastern half of the Province of the Punjab, in the northern corner of the State of Bikaner in Rajputana, and in the southern half of the State of Jammu. In the extreme north-east of the Province, i.e. in most of the Simla Hill States and Kulu, the language is Pahārī. Further south, in the districts lying on or near the right bank of the river Jamna, viz. in the eastern half of Umballa, in Karnal, in most of Hissar (and the neighbouring portions of the State of Patiala), in Rohtak, Delhi and Gurgaon, the language is not Pañjābī, but is some form of Western Hindī. With these exceptions, we may say that the vernacular of the whole of the eastern Punjab is Pañjābī. To the north of this area lie the Himalayas, to its south the arid plains of Bikaner, and to its west the inhospitable Bār of the Rechna Doab.

To its north and north-east Pañjābī is bounded by the Pahārī of the lower ranges of the Himalayas. It hardly extends into the hill country. On the east it has the various forms of western Hindī, Vernacular Hindōstānī in east Umballa, and Bāngarū spoken in the country immediately to the west of the Jamna. On the south it has the Bāgrī and Bīkānērī dialects of Rājasthānī spoken in west Hissar and Bikaner. The boundary between Pañjābī and all these languages is very fairly defined (although of course there is a certain amount of merging from one language into another), for the difference of language to a large extent connotes a difference of nationalities. More especially on the border-line between Pañjābī and Western Hindī we see that Pañjābī is essentially the language of the Sikhs. We may here roughly put the boundary between the two languages, as coinciding with the course of the river Ghaggar. The people to the east of the Ghaggar valley, excepting stray colonies of Sikhs, all speak Western Hindī.

To the south, on the other hand, there is a gradual merging into Rājasthānī, through an intermediate dialect named Bhaṭṭiānī. Like Pañjābī, Rājasthānī is a language which originally belonged to the Outer Circle of Indo-Aryan speeches, a substratum of which still remains. At the same time, this basis has been overlaid and almost hidden by a wave of language belonging to the Inner Group.¹ The two languages, thus closely resembling each other, merge into each other without difficulty. Indeed, it is a curious fact that the Ḍōgrā, the most northern form of Pañjābī, shows peculiarities of pronunciation (such as the change of the initial k to g in declensional suffixes) which also exist in Bāgrī.

¹ This will be fully explained when dealing with the characteristics of Pañjābī. Vide pp 614 ff., post.

On the north there is a distinct dialect of PaŖjābī, Dōgrā,—which is intermediate between standard PaŖjābī and the Pahārī of the lower Himalayas.

It will have been observed that hitherto I have said nothing about the western boundary of PaŖjābī. The reason is that it is impossible to fix such a boundary. To the west of PaŖjābī lies the Lahndā or Western PaŖjābī language, which we may take to be firmly established in the Jech Doab. On the other hand PaŖjābī of the purest kind is spoken in the upper part of the Bari Doab. Between these two lies the Rechna Doab and the lower part of the Bari Doab. A glance at the map facing page 607 will make my meaning clear. Here the language is a mixture of PaŖjābī and Lahndā,—more PaŖjābī to the east,—more Lahndā to the west. We shall see that the reason for this is that an old form of Lahndā must once have extended right up to the Sarasvatī, and that it is still the foundation of PaŖjābī. The Lahndā influence grows stronger (even in the PaŖjābī tract) as we go westwards, as the influence of the wave of the language of the Inner Group, which has encroached from the east and has formed modern PaŖjābī, weakens. It thus happens that, although in India we continually see two neighbouring languages gradually merging into each other, nowhere is the process so gradual as in the case of PaŖjābī and Lahndā. It is quite impossible to point to any boundary line or approximate boundary line between the two forms of speech. As, however, some kind of boundary between the two languages is necessary for the purposes of this Survey, I have assumed the following conventional line to mark the division between them. Commence at the northern end of the Pabbī range in the Gujrat district, go across the district to the Gujranwala town of Rāmnaḡar on the Chenab. Then draw a line nearly due south to the southern corner of Gujranwala, where it meets the northern corner of the district of Montgomery. Then continue the line to the southern corner of Montgomery on the Sutlej. Follow the Sutlej for a few miles and cross the northern corner of the State of Bahawalpur. Everything to the east of this line I call PaŖjābī, and everything to the west of it I call Lahndā; but it must be remembered that this line is a purely arbitrary convention, and that for some distance to the west of that line, the language which I call Lahndā differs but slightly from the language of the east of the Rechna Doab and of north-east Gujrat which I call PaŖjābī. I have been guided mainly by the vocabulary. To the west of the line, the language, which is mainly that of the tract known as the Bār, or Jungle, has a vocabulary which agrees much more closely with that of Lahndā. Except in Multan, we do not find Lahndā inflexions established till we cross the Chenab.

An interesting fact arises from the foregoing discussion. The Punjab, or Panj-āb, PaŖjābī and the Land of the Five Rivers. is properly the 'Land of the Five Rivers,' the Jhelum, the Chenab, the Ravi, the Beas, and the Sutlej. Now, the PaŖjābī language extends far to the east of the Sutlej, the most eastern of these five, reaching up to the Ghaggar. It occupies the Doabs between the Beas and Sutlej, and between the Ravi and the Beas-Sutlej. It also occupies a part of the Rechna Doab between the Chenab and small corner of the Jech Doab between the Jhelum and the Chenab, and the Ravi, but in nearly the whole of the great tract watered by the Chenab and the Jhelum and by the lower part of the Sutlej PaŖjābī is not spoken. PaŖjābī is hence not the language of the entire 'Land of the Five Rivers.'

Pañjābī has two dialects,—the ordinary idiom of the language, and Dōgrā or Dōgri.

Dialects and Sub-dialects

The latter, in various forms, is spoken over the submontane portion of the Jammu State and over most of the headquarters division of the Kangra district with an overflow into the neighbouring parts of the districts of Sialkot and Gurdaspur and of the State of Chamba. It will be dealt with separately, later on.

Ordinary Pañjābī is spoken over the rest of the Pañjābī area in the plains of the Punjab, and has also encroached into the neighbouring Simla Hill States. This standard Pañjābī varies slightly from place to place, and its purest form is admitted to be that of the Mājh or middle part of the Bari Doab, centring round Amritsar. This Mājhi sub-dialect may be said to be the language of cis-Ravi Lahore, of Amritsar, and of Gurdaspur. Lower down the Doab, in the district of Montgomery, the language is not pure Mājhi, but is mixed with Lahndā. We may take Mājhi as the standard form of Pañjābī. But, owing to the accidental circumstance that the first serious European students of Pañjābī lived at Ludhiana and not at Amritsar, another standard Pañjābī, which we may call the European Standard Pañjābī, has also come into existence. Ludhiana, where J. Newton wrote his Grammar in 1851, where a 'Committee of the Lodian Mission' published the first Pañjābī Dictionary in 1854, and where E. P. Newton published the latest and most complete grammar of the language in 1898, has, since the middle of the last century, been the fountain of instruction in Pañjābī for Englishmen. It is only natural that these eminent scholars should have taken as their standard that particular phase of Pañjābī with which they were most familiar, and we hence find that the idiom taught by them contains a few characteristics which are peculiar to eastern Pañjābī and are strange to the Mājh.¹ Of these the most striking is the employment of the peculiar cerebral ḷ. The sound of this letter is not heard in the Mājh, although its employment is taught in all the grammars and dictionaries.²

We thus see that there are two standards of Pañjābī, that of the Mājh, which is accepted by natives of India and (theoretically) by Europeans, and that of Ludhiana, which is the one practically accepted by Europeans, which is described in most grammars and dictionaries of the language, and into which the Scriptures have been translated.³

Dr Tisdall's little Simplified Grammar is the only one I have seen which is by an Englishman and which is confessedly founded on the Mājh dialect.

I may mention here that the Pañjābī versions of the Scriptures are criticized by native scholars as being in the idiom of Ludhiana.

² The use of this cerebral ḷ is restricted to a well defined tract of country. In the northern plains of India, it is heard between the Bīās-cum-Sutlej on the west, and the Ganges on the east. It is hence prominent in the Eastern Punjab, both where Pañjābī and where Hindōstānī and Bāngarī are spoken, and in the Upper Gangetic Doab, where the language is Hindōstānī. It is also common in the Western Pahāri of the Simla Hill States and the neighbourhood, and in the Central Pahāri of Garhwal and Kumaon, but does not appear in the Eastern Pahāri or Khas-kurā of Nepal. The central line from which it here radiates may be taken as the course of the sacred river, the Saraswatī. I have not met with it in Braj Bhākṣā, but, through Bāngarī, it extends south into the Bāgri country and thence over Rajputana, Central India, Gujarat, and the Marāṭhī country. In the south of India it is heard in Dravidian languages. It does not occur in Sindhi, nor is it in Kāshmīrī or Khas, but is heard in Lahndā and the neighbouring Pañjābī tract west of the Mājh. It occurs in the other Himalayan Indo-Aryan dialects west of Western Pahāri, but gradually disappears as we approach Kāshmīrī through Puncbhī.

³ The Dulhan Darpan, an adaptation of the Mir'at-ul 'arūs, by Bhāl Hazārā Singh Giānī of Amritsar, which is in the purest dialect of the Mājh, does not contain a single cerebral ḷ from cover to cover.

The other sub-dialects of ordinary Pañjābī are the dialect of the Jullunder Doab, Pōwādhī, Rāthī, Mālwaī, Bhaṭṭiānī, and the Pañjābī of the Rechna Doab and North-east Gujrat. The dialect of the Jullunder Doab closely resembles that of Ludhiana. As we approach the hills, however, we see signs of the influence of Pahārī. Pōwādhī (the Pañjābī of the Pōwādh, or eastern Punjab), as its name implies, is the most eastern form of Pañjābī. It is spoken on the south bank of the Sutlej in the Ludhiana district (and is here identical with the Ludhiana dialect just dealt with at some length), but its main territory is the Pañjābī speaking part of the Punjab east of, say, the 76th degree of east longitude. To its east we have the Western Pahārī of the southern Simla Hill States, the vernacular Hindōstānī of Umballa and East Patiala, and the Bāngarū of Karnal. To its south it has the Rāthī Pañjābī to be described immediately, and to its west Mālwaī Pañjābī. As we may expect, Pōwādhī Pañjābī is more and more influenced by Western Hindī as we go eastwards. Immediately to the south of Pōwādhī and Mālwaī Pañjābī, in the valley of the Ghaggar, lies the Rāthī Pañjābī of the Rāth or 'Ruthless' Musalmān Pachhāḍās of that tract. It is even more strongly infected by the Bāngarū dialect of Western Hindī than Pōwādhī. It is also noteworthy for its preference for nasal sounds. To its south lie the Bāgrī and Bāngarū of Hissar. West of the 76th degree of east longitude as far as the Sutlej lies the Mālwa or old settled dry country of the Sikh Jatts, to the south of which lies the 'Jangal' or unsettled country. The language of these areas is known as Mālwaī Pañjābī or Jāngalī. To its south it has the Rāthī Pañjābī of the Ghaggar valley, and the Bhaṭṭiānī Pañjābī of South Ferozepore and Bikaner. Mālwaī Pañjābī does not differ materially from the Ludhiana Standard, but as we go south a tendency is observable to substitute a dental n and l for a cerebral n and l respectively. South of the Mālwa in South Ferozepore and north-west Bikaner, lies Bhaṭṭiānā, the country of the Bhaṭṭīs. Here Pañjābī is merging into Rājasthānī and we find a mixed dialect which I name Bhaṭṭiānī. Bhaṭṭiānī is spoken on the left bank of the Sutlej a long way up into Ferozepore, and is there locally known as Rāthaurī. Crossing the Sutlej we enter the Bari Doab. The central portion of this is the Mājh and has been already dealt with. South-east of Lahore lies the district of Montgomery, like Lahore, lying on both sides of the Ravi. The cis-Ravi portion of Montgomery, although politically within the Bari Doab, belongs linguistically to the next Doab, the Rechna, between the Ravi and the Chenab. It is in this Rechna Doab that we see Pañjābī merging into Lahndā.

As explained above, it is impossible to show any distinct boundary between these two languages, and, for the purposes of this Survey, I have adopted a purely conventional line commencing at the northern end of the Pabbī range of hills near the north-west corner of Gujrat and ending on the Sutlej at the south-east corner of Montgomery, with a slight deflection down the Sutlej, across the north-eastern end of the State of Bahawalpur, where it meets the southern border of Bhaṭṭiānī. Everything to the east of this line I call, for the purposes of this Survey, Pañjābī, and everything to its west Lahndā. This Pañjābī of north-east Gujrat, of the Rechna Doab, and of east Montgomery becomes more and more infected with Lahndā characteristics as we go west.

The following tables show the number of speakers of Pañjābī as estimated for this Survey. Most of the figures are based on those of the Census of 1891. I commence with the number of speakers of Pañjābī in those tracts in which it is a vernacular.

other hand the above figures include 636,500 speakers of the Kangra dialect who, in the Census tables, are shown as speaking Pahāri, and also include the 434,000 speakers of Dōgrā in Jammu territory and 22,000 speakers of Bhaṭṭiānī in Bikaner, which do not appear in the Punjab Census tables at all, as Jammu and Bikaner do not fall politically within that province. By making these allowances on each side, we arrive at a Census total of 12,262,395. The difference between this and the above Survey figures, which amounts to 301,744, is due, partly to the fact that round numbers are employed as much as possible in the Survey, partly to the fact that many of the Survey figures are independent estimates made by local officials some seven or eight years after the Census had been taken, and partly to the inclusion, in the Survey figures, of small items which, in the Census tables, are grouped under other languages. In border tracts where one language merges into another, classification necessarily depends much on the personal equation, which must be allowed for in dealing with statistics of this kind.

We now come to the number of people who speak Pañjābī outside the limits of the Punjab. Here we have to resort to the figures of the Census of 1891, and are confronted by two difficulties. At that Census, the speakers of the various languages were not enumerated in Kashmir or in Rajputana and Central India. In the second place, at that Census (except in the Punjab) no distinction was made between Lahndā and Pañjābī, the two being grouped together under one head—Pañjābī. I therefore in the following table cannot give the number of speakers of Pañjābī in Kashmir or in Rajputana and Central India, and instead thereof give the total number of people of Punjab birth (for which figures are available) in these localities. The second difficulty is more serious. We can only estimate. In the Census of 1901 the figures for Lahndā and Pañjābī were kept separate, and their totals bore the proportion of 3 and 17, respectively, to each other. I assume that this proportion was also true for 1891 and deduct from the total of the following figures three-twentieths, to allow for speakers of Lahndā. The remainder should approximately represent the total number of speakers of Pañjābī outside the Punjab.

Deducting three-twentieths of this, i.e. 35,030, for Lahndā, we arrive at an estimated total of 198,500 for the number of people who speak Pañjābī in India outside the Punjab.

We thus arrive at the total number of speakers of Pañjābī in all India :—

Most of the speakers of Pañjābī outside the Punjab are either Sikh troops or police officers and the like.

Pañjābī, together with Western Hindī, Rājasthānī, and Gujarātī, is one of the members of the Central Group of the Indo-Aryan Vernaculars. Of these the only pure member of the Group is Western Hindī. The others are mixed languages. Although in the main possessing the essential characteristics of the Central Group they each present signs of another language which has been superseded,—overlaid would be a more correct expression—by a central one. We shall see this clearly in the case of Rājasthānī and Gujarātī, and shall also notice in the case of these two languages, that the further we go from the centre from which the Inner Language encroached, the more prominent this submerged layer becomes. In every case this submerged layer was evidently a language of the Outer Circle of Indo-Aryan languages. We may take the centre of dispersion as the central Gangetic Doab between Mathurā and Kanauj. Kanauj, it may be remarked, was the great centre of Indo-Aryan power during the centuries preceding the Musalmān conquest of India.

Pañjābī is the language of the Eastern Punjab, and, at the present day, immediately to its west, in the Western Punjab, we find Lahndā to be the vernacular. Lahndā is one of the languages of the Outer Circle, and is closely connected with Sindhī, Kāshmīrī and the languages of the Indus-Kōhistān. There can be no doubt, if linguistic evidence is of any value, that a language closely akin to this Lahndā was also once spoken over the entire area of which Pañjābī is now the vernacular. Immediately to the east of Pañjābī we have the Hindōstānī forms of Western Hindī which are spoken on both sides of the river Jamnā and in the Upper Gangetic Doab. It is clear from the present linguistic conditions that an old form of this Hindōstānī has gradually spread over the whole of the eastern Punjab, superseding, or overlying, the old Lahndā language, as far, at least, as the upper half of the river Chenab. Indeed, its influence has spread further, and it is not till we get to the great thal, or sandy tract between the Jhelum-Chenab and the Indus, that we lose all traces of it. As in Rajputana, the desert has formed a barrier against the advancing tide of the Central language, and, in each case, we find west of it a pure language of the Outer Circle—in the one case Sindhī, in the other Lahndā.

As this tide progressed westward from its starting point, it gradually lost its body and its force. In the extreme east of the Pañjābī tract, on the banks of the ancient Sarasvatī, few traces of the ancient Lahndā are observable. When we come to the Bari Doab, where standard Pañjābī is spoken, we find several characteristics of Lahndā still surviving which have disappeared in the Pōwādh or Eastern Punjab. In the Rechna Doab these characteristics become more prominent and here we come to the conventional boundary line between Pañjābī and Lahndā. In the Jech Doab they are still more in evidence and Lahndā may be said to be firmly established. In the Sindh-Sāgar Doab all except one or two traces of the influence of the Central language have disappeared, and we are in the presence of a true language of the Outer Circle. We thus see that Pañjābī is a composite language.

To change the metaphor, its substratum is a language of the Outer Circle akin to the modern Lahndā, while its superstructure is a dialect of Western Hindī. The superstructure is so important, and has so concealed the foundation, that Pañjābī is rightly classed, at the present day, as a language of the Central Group.

Coming to details, we find in the first place an initial w or v in Western Hindī always becomes b, while in the Pañjābī it is in certain cases retained. Thus, Western Hindī bich, but Pañjābī vichh, in. This is also characteristic of Sindhī, Lahndā and Kāshmīrī.

There is another circumstance in Pañjābī pronunciation which is extremely characteristic, and gives the clear-cut tone to the language, that at once attracts the attention of anyone who hears it for the first time. In order to describe it, it will be necessary to discuss a question of derivation. All the various Prakrit dialects of India had, for reasons which it is unnecessary to explain here, a large number of words containing each a double consonant, preceded by a short vowel. For instance, we may take ghōḍassa, of a horse; juttō, joined; khaggō, a sword; makkhanam, ointment; mārissai, he will strike. By one of the phonetic rules of these languages there was a tendency to simplify these double letters by omitting the first member of the compound, and to lengthen the preceding short vowel in compensation. There was thus a tendency for these words to become respectively ghōḍāsa; jūtō; khāgō; mākhaṇam; mārīsa.¹ In the modern vernaculars of the Central Group, we observe this tendency acting with no uniformity. In Western Hindī we commonly meet both forms of the same word—often one in the literary language, and the other in colloquial speech. Thus for ‘butter’ the Prakrit makkhanam becomes makkhan in Literary Hindōstānī, but we often hear mākhan in the mouths of the villagers. In Rājasthānī the tendency to simplify the compound increases as we go westward and southward till we arrive at Gujarātī in which language simplification, with compensatory lengthening of the preceding vowel, has become the general rule. We have mākhaṇ and never makkhaṇ. On the other hand, the Hindōstānī of the Upper Gangetic Doab prefers the pronunciation of the double letter, with the short preceding vowel, so that we have always makkhaṇ and not mākhaṇ. Pañjābī follows suit in this. It never simplifies such compounds. We always have makkhaṇ, not mākhaṇ. Similarly we have Pañjābī kamm, but Hindōstānī kām, work; Pañjābī vichh, but Hindōstānī bich, in; Pañjābī uchhā, but Hindōstānī ūchā, high.² All this gives a predominant sound of sharply doubled letters throughout a Pañjābī sentence, and gives the well-known clear-cut character to the language as heard by one whose acquaintance with Indian languages was first made in the Ganges Valley.

² Lahndā, in this, follows Pañjābī. It has makkhaṇ. Sindhī carries the process forward another way. It simplifies a sord compound consonant but does not lengthen the vowel. It has mak'han. All this is of importance when considering the derivation of Pañjābī words. For instance we may be sure that the Pañjābī word sītā, sewn, is not contracted from sittā*. Such a contraction would be against the genius of Pañjābī, Lahndā, or Sindhī.

In the declension of nouns, we find that the termination of strong masculine substantives with a-bases, is ā, not au or ō as in pure Western Hindi. Thus we have ghōrā, a horse, not ghōrau or ghorō, as in Western Hindi.

Nominal termination.

This is typical of nearly all the languages of the Outer Circle. Compare the Marāṭhī ghōḍā and the Bengali ghōrā.¹

A characteristic of Pañjābī which at once strikes the beginner, and which is, in fact, a most prominent feature of the language, is the employment of the termination dā for the suffix of the genitive, instead of the kau, kō (or kā) of Western Hindi. This termination is also employed in Southern Lahndā, and no doubt belongs to the original form of that language which once spread all over the Punjab. It is certainly indigenous in the Eastern Punjab.²

Termination of the Genitive.

Literary Hindōstānī employs the suffix nē to indicate the case of the agent. This suffix does not properly belong to Western Hindi (of which Hindōstānī is a dialect). In the other dialects of that language an organic case of the agent is employed without any suffix. The nē of Literary Hindōstānī is, however, also found in the Vernacular Hindōstānī of the Upper Gangetic Doab, and is clearly borrowed from Pañjābī in which language its employment (under the form of nai) is regular.

Termination of the case of the Agent.

The plurals of the pronouns of the first and second persons (asī, we, oblique form asā, and tusī, ye, obl. form tusā), are relics of the old Lahndā basis of the language, and do not belong to the true Central Language, which has ham and tum respectively. Compare Sindhī asī (obl. asā), we : Lahndā assī (obl. assā), we ; tussī (obl. tussā), you ; Maiyā (of the Indus Kōhistān) tus, you ; Kāshmirī ās (obl. asē), we. Moreover, these pronouns make their genitives asādā, tusādā. The cerebral ḍ in these words is typical of Lahndā.

Personal Pronouns.

The Pañjābī verb occasionally makes a passive voice by adding ī to the root.³ This is common in Lahndā, while a closely connected passive form is current in Sindhī. In Western Hindi this passive has only survived (if this is a survival) in one or two of the so-called polite imperatives.

Passive voice.

¹ In this respect, Pañjābī has reacted on those dialects of Western Hindi which are geographically nearest to it. The dialect of the Upper Gangetic Doab, and the Literary Hindōstānī founded upon it, both have ā, not au or ō. So also Braj Bhāṣā nouns substantive, but not adjectives.

² Both dā and kā are derived from the same old Sanskrit word kṛitah. Both have come down to the vernaculars through the Prakrit kidaḥ or kidau. In Hindōstānī, in process of time, the ḍ disappeared, and the word became kiaḥ, and hence kā, which it will be observed is a postposition,—a distinct word,—and not a termination. On the other hand, the languages of the Outer Circle treated kidaḥ, not as a separate word, but as a termination. Thus for 'of a horse,' the speakers of the old language from which Hindōstānī is derived said ghōḍahī kidau (hence ghōrē kā) in which kidau is as distinct a word as is 'of' in the English phrase. But the speakers of the old Lahndā said ghōḍahīkidau, in which they dealt with kidau as if it were a termination like the i in the Latin equi. Now, there is a well-known phonetic rule that in a case like this a h between two vowels in the same word disappears. Hence as ghōḍahīkidau was spoken as one word it became ghōḍahīidau, and hence ghōrēdā, without any hyphen between the ghōrē and the dā. This tendency to unite old postpositions with the main word, and to treat the two as one, is typical of the languages of the Outer Circle, and is rare in the languages of the Central Group.

The termination kidau is noted by Prakrit Grammarians as surviving in Śaurasēnī Prakrit the language of the Central and Upper Gangetic Doab, but its occurrence in Lahndā shows that it must have survived to a comparatively late period over the greater part of North-Western India.

³ I have met this passive but rarely in the limited course of my Pañjābī reading. Except Mr. Tisdall's, all the grammars include Lahndā under Pañjābī. Mr. E. P. Newton mentions this passive, but all his examples are taken from the Jaṇam Sākhi, a Lahndā work.

One of the most striking characteristics of the languages of the Outer Circle is the free use they make of pronominal suffixes added to verbs (a procedure totally strange to the languages of the Central Group). Thus, Lahndā has ākheus, said (ākheā) by him (us), i.e. he said. In the Mājhi dialect of Pañjābī, these also occur. Thus, ākhius, he said. We rarely hear these further East.

Finally, like Lahndā and Sindhī, Pañjābī is a language with a vocabulary mainly composed of honest tadbhavas. Tatsama words are conspicuous only by their absence, and in this respect the tongue of the Land of the Five Rivers offers a striking contrast to the bastard mixture of Sanskrit and vernacular which the Pandits of Calcutta and Benares imagine to be literature. It is a homely language, redolent of the Punjab of to-day. Mr Beames¹ puts this well,—

‘There is a flavour of wheaten flour and a reek of cottage smoke about Pañjābī and Sindhī, which is infinitely more natural and captivating than anything which the hide-bound Pandit-ridden languages of the eastern parts of India can show us.’

But though thus homely in character, it must not be assumed that it is a rude form of speech incapable of literature. It is no more rude than was the broad lowland Scotch of the poet Burns. Pañjābī can express any idea with its own stock of vocables, and is well adapted for both prose and poetry. It is true that it has hardly any literature, but that is due to its being overshadowed by its near relation, Hindostānī, and to the fact that for centuries the Punjab has been ruled from Delhi; but the ballads of the people, which are current everywhere, well show its capabilities. Even at the present day there is too great a tendency to look down upon it as a mere dialect of Hindostānī (which it is not), and to deny its status as an independent language. Its claim mainly rests upon its phonetic system and on its store of words not found in Hindī, both of which characteristics are due to its old Lahndā foundation. Some of the most common Pañjābī words do not occur in Hindostānī. Such are piu, a father; māū, a mother; ākhnā, to say; ikk, one; sāh, breath; tih, thirst, and hundreds of others, all of which can be found in languages of the Outer Circle.

The mixed character of the languages of the Central and Western Punjab (Pañjābī and Lahndā) is well illustrated by the character given to the inhabitants of those tracts in the Mahābhārata, and by incidental references in the grammar of Pānini. Although not distant from the Madhyadēśa or Gangetic Doab, the centre from which Sanskrit civilisation spread, we learn that the laws and customs of the Punjab were at a very early period widely different from those of the Madhyadēśa. The people are at one time described as living in a state of kingless anarchy, and at another time as possessing no Brāhman (a dreadful thing to an orthodox Hindū of the Middle Country), living in petty villages, and governed by princes who supported themselves by internecine war. Not only were there no Brāhman, but there were no castes. The population had no respect for the Vēda, and offered no sacrifices to the gods. They were rude and uncultured, given to drinking spirituous liquor, and eating all kinds of flesh. Their women were large-bodied, yellow, extremely immoral in their behaviour, and seem to have lived in a state of polyandry, a man's heir being not his son, but the son of his sister's.¹ That this account was true in every particular need not be urged. It is given to us by enemies; but, whether true or not, it illustrates the gulf in habits, customs, and languages, which existed between the Madhyadēśa and the Punjab.

Pañjābī has a very scanty literature. The oldest work which is usually said to be written in the language is the Ādi Granth, the sacred Scriptures of the Sikhs; but, although the manuscripts of the book are universally written in the Gurmukhī character, a very small portion of its contents is really in the Pañjābī language. It is a collection of hymns by various poets, most of whom wrote in some form of Western Hindī, while others even wrote in Marāṭhī. The best known Pañjābī portion is the Jappī, or introductory stanzas by Nānak, who was born in 1469 A.D. The celebrated Janam Sākhī (a life of Nānak) is in Lahndā, not in Pañjābī. Later works are the Sākhī-nāma (translated into English by Sardār Attar Singh Bhadauriā), another Janam Sākhī by Mani Singh, and a life of Har Gōbind, the sixth guru (1606-1638 A.D.). Some of these are probably in Lahndā, but I cannot say this for certain, as I have not seen any of them. The Wārā Bhūi Gurdās dā is a collection of verses dating from the guruship of Arjun (1581-1606 A.D.), and has been printed (Amritsar, 1879). The verses are written in the style known as wār. A wār originally meant a dirge for the brave slain in battle, and hence any martial song of praise, and the poems are intended to describe the battle of good and evil in the human soul. As specimens of the earlier secular literature, Dr. Thornton² mentions the Pāras bhāg (a collection of ethical precepts), an epic on Akbar's siege of Chittaur, and a much admired epic on Nādir Shāh's invasion. The later literature is mainly composed of translations and imitations of works in Sanskrit, Hindī, or Persian. The most famous of these imitators is Hāshim, who flourished in the time of Ranjit Singh. The Khair Manukh is a poetical guide to the Greek system of medicine.

Besides the above, the bardic, or folk-literature, of the Punjab deserves more than a passing notice. It contains several cycles that may almost be called epics, the most important of which are those referring to the famous hero Rājā Rasālū, to Hirā and Rānjhā, and to Mirzā and Sāhibā. The version of the Hirā and Rānjhā legend by Wāris Shāh is considered to be a model of the purest Pañjābī. The folk-poetry of the Punjab has received considerable attention from European scholars, and deservedly so. It has all the swing and music of the border ballads of England and Scotland. The best known work on the subject is Colonel Sir Richard Temple's monumental Legends of the Panjāb.

The Serampore missionaries issued a Pañjābī version of the New Testament in 1815. Since then several editions of other parts of the Bible have appeared in the language. There is also a considerable Christian literature.

AUTHORITIES—

Carey, the famous missionary of Serampore, was the first to describe the Pañjābī language, in his Grammar published in 1812. The only previous mention of it which I can find is a couple of brief notices in Adelung's Mithridates (1808—1817).

¹ Can the author of this description have had the customs of the Jatts in his mind when writing? The passage referred to above is Mahābhārata, VIII, 3029 ff. In l. 2033 the tribe of Jārttikas is mentioned, and these perhaps were the ancestors of the modern Jatts.

² See the article mentioned under the head of Authorities.

The following is a list of all the works dealing with Pañjābī which have come under my notice. Except in one or two instances, I have excluded reference to texts printed in India. These can be found in Mr. Blumhardt's catalogues mentioned below. I give, however, a pretty full account of editions of the Ādi Granth. I have excluded all mention of works in Western Pañjābī, or Lahndā, in which the Janam Sākhī and other works are written. This is an altogether different language, akin to Sindhī and Kāshmīrī.

I.—GENERAL (including Texts)

ĀDI GRANTH,—Srī Guru Granth Sāhib Ji Numerous editions. I have noted the following. Unless otherwise stated, they are in the Gurmukhī character. Lahore, 1864; ib., 1868; ib., 1881, Gujranwala, 1882; Lahore, 1885; ib., 1886, ib., 1887; ib., 1889, Amritsar, 1892. Lucknow (Dēva-nāgarī character), 1893.

- CUMMINGS, REV. T. F., AND GRAHAM BAILEY, REV. T.,—Panjabi Manual and Grammar: a Guide to the Colloquial Panjabi of the Northern Panjab Calcutta, 1912 (This deals mainly with the Pañjabī spoken north and north-west of Lahore.)

The Pañjabī language is usually said to be written in the Gurmukhī alphabet; indeed, the name ‘Gurmukhī’ is often applied, most incorrectly, to the language itself. There is no more a ‘Gurmukhī’ language than there is a ‘Dēva-nāgarī’ one. As a matter of fact several languages have been written in Gurmukhī. The Ādi Granth, which is throughout written in that character, is mostly in some dialect or other of Western Hindī, and even contains some Marāthī hymns.

The true alphabet of the Punjab is known as the Laṇḍā or ‘clipped.’ It is connected with the Mahājānī character of Northern India, and resembles it in having a very imperfect system of representing the vowel sounds. Vowel signs are frequently omitted. It is said that in the time of Aṅgad, the second Sikh Guru (1538-1552 A.D.), this Laṇḍā was the only alphabet employed in the Punjab for writing the vernacular. Aṅgad found that Sikh hymns written in Laṇḍā were liable to be misread, and he accordingly improved it by borrowing signs from the Dēva-nāgarī alphabet (then only used for Sanskrit manuscripts), and by polishing up the forms of the letters, so as to make them fit for recording the scriptures of the Sikh religion. Having been invented by him this character became known as the Gur-mukhī, or the alphabet proceeding from the mouth of the Guru. Ever since, this alphabet has been employed for writing the Sikh Scriptures, and its use has widely spread, mainly among members of that sect.

On the other hand Laṇḍā has remained current all over the Punjab, and is especially used by shop-keepers.

Closely resembling Laṇḍā is Ṭākṛī or Ṭākṛī, the character employed in the Himalayas north of the Punjab, a refined variety of which is Dōgrī, the official character of Jammu. Ṭākṛī leads us further north into Kashmir. Here, just as Gurmukhī is a polished form of Laṇḍā, we find the Śaradā character employed in Kashmir by Hindūs for all purposes. It is a polished variety of Ṭākṛī, and is as complete as Dēva-nāgarī. In order to show the close connection between these four alphabets, I give them together, in parallel columns, on the following page. Laṇḍā and Ṭākṛī differ considerably from place to place, and I have taken the specimens from fairly central localities in the area in which they are respectively employed.¹

¹ Dōgrī is fully described in pp. 637 ff. For other varieties of Laṇḍā and Ṭākṛī, the reader is referred to Dr. Leitner's Collection of Specimens, mentioned under the head of ‘Authorities’ Compare also the present writer's article on the Modern Indo-Aryan Alphabets of North-Western India, also mentioned under that head.

While the Śāradā alphabet closely follows the Dēva-nāgarī in the arrangement of its letters, and in the system of representation of its vowels, Gurmukhī, with Landā and Tākri, diverges somewhat from the latter in both particulars.

Gurmukhī has only one sibilant ਸ sa, corresponding to the Dēva-nāgarī स. It has nothing to correspond to the Dēva-nāgarī श śa or ष ṣha, these letters not being required for the Pañjābī language. When it is desired to represent the sound of śh, as it appears in words borrowed from Arabic or Persian, a dot is put under ਸ sa. Thus, ਸ śha.

In the order of the alphabet, ਸ sa and ਹ ha do not come at the end, after the other consonants, as in Dēva-nāgarī, but precede the other consonants, coming immediately after the vowels.

The system of representing vowels in Gurmukhī is somewhat peculiar. It has three signs, viz. ਅ, ਏ, and ਓ which are known respectively as āīrā, īrī, and ūrā. These are used when vowels are initial, as bases to support the non-initial forms of the vowels it is desired to represent. With these bases they become initial vowels. ਅ āīrā is used as the base of the initial forms of ਅ a, ਆ ā, ਐ ai, and ਔ au, the non-initial forms of the last three being ੀ and ੂ respectively. As in Dēva-nāgarī, ਅ a has no non-initial form. ਏ īrī is used as the base of the initial forms of ਏ i, ਈ ī, and ਏ ē, the non-initial forms of these vowels being ਿ, ਿ, and ੋ respectively. ਓ ūrā is the base of the initial forms of ਓ u and ਊ ū, the non-initial forms of these vowels being ੁ and ੂ respectively. Finally by slightly modifying the upper curve of ਓ ūrā, so as to leave it open, we get ਓ, the initial form of the vowel ō, of which the non-initial form is ੋ.

We thus arrive at the following vowels as written in the Gurmukhī alphabet.

INITIAL FORMS.

ਅ a, ਆ ā, ਏ i, ਈ ī, ਓ u, ਊ ū, ਏ ē, ਐ ai, ਓ ō, ਔ au.

NON-INITIAL FORMS.

ਕ ka, ਕਾ kā, ਕਿ ki, ਕੀ kī, ਕੁ ku, ਕੂ kū, ਕੇ kē, ਕੈ kai, ਕੋ kō, ਕੌ kau.

The Gurmukhī consonants are as follows :—

| | | | | |
|----------------|-----------------|---------------|---------------------------|----------------|
| ਸ sa , | ਹ ha , | | | |
| ਕ ka , | ਖ kha , | ਗ ga , | ਘ gha , | ਙ ṅa . |
| ਚ cha , | ਛ chha , | ਜ ja , | ਝ jha , | ਞ ṇa . |
| ਟ ṭa , | ਠ ṭha , | ਡ ḍa , | ਢ ḍha , | ਣ ṇa . |
| ਤ ta , | ਥ tha , | ਦ da , | ਧ dha , | ਨ na . |
| ਪ pa , | ਫ pha , | ਬ ba , | ਭ bha , | ਮ ma . |
| ਯ ya , | ਰ ra , | ਲ la , | ਵ wa , va . | ਸ਼ ṣa . |

Each vowel and consonant has, in Pañjābī, a definite name. Thus, non-initial ੀ ā is called ā-kannā, non-initial ਿ i, i-aiārī, and so on. Similarly, ਸ sa, is called sasā, ਹ ha is called haḥā, and so on. It is unnecessary to give these names here, as they are of little practical use and can be found in any Pañjābī Grammar.

There are two nasal signs, viz. ˘ known as ṭippī, and ˙ known as bindī.

Ṭippī can be written over any syllable containing (non-initial) u, or any of the short vowels a, i, or (non-initial) u. Before ṣ sa, it is pronounced as n. Thus, ṣṣ is pronounced ans. Before h or another vowel, or at the end of a word, it has the sound of the n in the French word bon, which I represent by the sign ˜ over the vowel nasalised. Thus, ṣṣh stḥ, ṣṣu jīu, ṣṣ nṣ. Before any other consonant it has the sound of the nasal of the class to which that consonant belongs. Thus, ṣṣa changā, ṣṣhī pañchhī, ṣṣ piṇḍ, ṣṣ hindū, ṣṣā khannā, ṣṣ amb, ṣṣ sammāt.

Bindī may be written over any syllable containing any of the long vowels ā, i, ē, ai, ō or au, whether initial or non-initial, or over the initial forms of u and ū (the non-initial forms of these last two vowels take ṭippī). Bindī generally has the sound of the n in the French word bon, and is then represented in transliteration by ˜. Thus, ṣṣā bās, ṣṣī asī, ṣṣē elō. Often, however, when not at the end of a word or preceding h or s, it is pronounced like ṭippī.

The Pañjābī language requires very few compound consonants. The following are the ones most usually met with:— ṣṣa, ṣṣmha, ṣṣnha, ṣṣrha, ṣṣlha, ṣṣṛha, ṣṣgya, ṣṣstha, ṣṣtya, ṣṣsma. When ra is the second member of a conjunct it takes the form of a subscript dash. Thus, ṣṣra, ṣṣkra, ṣṣkhra, ṣṣgra, ṣṣtra (rather common), ṣṣdra, ṣṣpra, ṣṣbra, ṣṣbhra.

When a letter is doubled the sign ˘, known as adhik, is written above the line immediately in front of it. Thus, ṣṣṣ sapp, ṣṣṣī gaddī, ṣṣṣū assū, ṣṣṣhū bichohhū, ṣṣṣ patthar.

Other compound consonants are indicated by mere juxtaposition. Thus, ṣṣṣṣ bakbakī, not bakabakī, as we might expect; ṣṣṣṣ khurchan, not khuraohan; ṣṣṣṣ māṭṭā, not māṭanā; ṣṣṣṣ mārda, not māradā or mār'dā.

In the Eastern Punjab, but not in the Mājḥ, there is a cerebral ḷ-sound which also occurs in Lahndā, Vernacular Hindōstānī, Central and Western Pahārī, Rājasthānī, Gujarātī, Marāṭhī, and Oriyā. It is indicated by affixing a short tick to the right hand lower corner of the ordinary character for l. Thus, ṣṣḷ la.

As in Western Hindī the inherent a of the final consonant of a word is not pronounced.

The letter ṣ sometimes has the sound of wa, and sometimes that of va. The va is not pronounced as in English, with the lower lip pressed against the upper teeth. It is a pure labial sound made by pressing the two lips together, and letting the breath issue between them. In cognate languages the letter generally has a v-sound before the vowels i and e (whether long or short) and a w-sound before other vowels. In Pañjābī this rule generally holds good when the letter is in the middle of a word, but at the commencement of a word it is not followed. Here the only rule seems to be custom, and I have accordingly given as a supplement to the skeleton grammar a list of words taken from Bhāi Māyā Singh's Dictionary which commence with the letter and in which that letter is pronounced as v. In all other Pañjābī words commencing with the letter it is pronounced as w.¹

Hitherto we have dealt with the alphabets employed by Sikhs and Hindūs. It must be remembered that there is also a large Musalmān population in the Pañjābī-speaking area, which uses PaŖjābī as freely as its Hindū neighbours. These people, however, when they write the language usually employ the Perso-Arabic alphabet as adapted for Hindōstānī. It has no local peculiarities.

Specimens written in all the foregoing scripts (except Landā) will be found in the following pages. No specimens have been received in Landā, nor does that character easily lend itself to writing more than a few sentences. Its decipherment is so difficult even to those who write it, that it is seldom employed except for writing accounts and the like among illiterate shopkeepers.

PaŖjābī Grammar in the main follows that of Hindōstānī, Grammar. so that few remarks are necessary.

As regards pronunciation, the only letters which require special notice are h and some of the aspirated consonants. In Lahndā these are pronounced in a peculiar way, and the same fact is evident in the western districts of the PaŖjābī area. The best account of this pronunciation is that given by Mr. Grahame Bailey in his grammar of the Wazirabad dialect, of which the following is an abstract.

In these districts, when h commences a word, or precedes an accented syllable, it has a strong guttural sound resembling that of a somewhat strongly pronounced ع 'ain, in Arabic. We might compare the Cockney pronunciation of ham as 'am (not 'am). Thus, hiyyā, the sides of a bed, is pronounced 'iyyā, and pihāi, the wages of grinding, pi'āi.

In other positions, i.e. when it is not at the beginning of a word or preceding an accented syllable, it is hardly audible or may be altogether inaudible, but it strongly raises the pitch of the preceding vowel, often altering the whole tone of the word. Thus, lāh, bring down, is very different in sound from lā, attach, although the h in the former is often quite inaudible. Similarly the first ā in kāhlā, speedy, is pronounced in a high tone, while in kālā, black, it has the ordinary tone, although the h in the former word is not itself sounded.

The same remarks apply to the h shown in transliteration of soft (not hard) aspirated consonants, viz. :—gh, jh, dh, dh, bh, nh, nh, mh, rh, rh, wh, etc., but not in the case of the hard aspirated consonants kh, chh, th, th, ph, or of sh. Thus, bhrā, a brother, is pronounced b'rā, ghumā, a measure of land, g'umā, and Chanhā, the Chināb river, is pronounced Chan'ā. On the other hand, in kūrkh, in which rh follows an accented vowel, the h is inaudible, but the u is pronounced in a higher tone than in kūr, the joint of a plough; and the a of bāggā (pronounced bāgg'ā, not bāgg'ā), a buggy, is higher in tone than the a of bāggā (feminine), white.

In nouns, the most noteworthy peculiarities are that the oblique plural ends in ā and that the suffix of the genitive is dā, which, like adjectives ending in ā, agrees, not only in gender and number, but also in case, with the noun with which it is in agreement.

In the verbs, two forms of the verb substantive may be noted. One is jā, he is. This is only heard in the western districts of the PaŖjābī area, and its correct meaning was first indicated by Mr. Grahame Bailey in his Wazirabad Grammar already alluded to. By origin jā is the pronoun of the second person plural combined with the verb substantive, and it properly means 'there is to (or by) you.' This is evident in phrases like :—

kī mīlēā jē, literally, what was got to you, i.e. what did you get? Standard Pañjābī tuhānū kī mīliā.

kī ākheā jē, what was said by you, what did you say? Standard tusī kī ākheā.

kī jē, what has happened to you.

Generally, the reference to the second person is less direct, and must be translated, if at all, by some such phrase as 'I say to you,' or 'I ask you.' Thus, kī jē, already given, also means 'I ask you what has happened (to anybody, not necessarily to you).' Similarly :—

ōtthē dō jē, I say to you there are two there.

maī āyā jē, I say to you I have come.

sāhō jē, I say to you it is the Sāhib.

It is evident that, in the last three examples, the 'I say to you' can be for all practical purposes omitted, and the jē represented, as it is in the grammar, by 'he is' or 'they are.' It can, however, only be used in sentences like the foregoing.

The common form of the past tense of the verb substantive is usually sī for both masculine and feminine singular, and for the masculine plural. This is generally explained as the feminine of sā, but much more probably it is a corruption of some old form akin to the Prakrit āsī, Sanskrit āsīt, he was. The infinitive of the finite verb generally ends in na (not na), though na occurs in the case of some verbs. The future presents a few irregularities and there is a passive voice formed by adding ī to the active root (see p. 616), but on the whole the conjugation of the verb closely resembles that of vernacular Hindōstānī. It is therefore believed that the annexed skeleton grammar will enable the student to understand the language of the following specimens.

PAÑJĀBĪ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

I. NOUNS.—Gender.—This closely follows Hindōstānī. The most important exception is rāḥ, a road, which is masculine in Pañjabī.
Number and Case.—The nominative plural closely follows Hindōstānī. Oblique plurals terminate in ā. Thus,—

| Singular. | | Plural. | | |
|-------------------------------|-----------------|---------------------------|---------------------------|---|
| Direct. | Oblique. | Direct. | Oblique. | |
| munḍā , a boy | munḍē | munḍā | munḍiā | The following are the usual forms of the Vocative :— o munḍiā (sing.) ; o munḍiō ; o bānīā (or bānīō) ; o bānīō ; o manukkhā ; o manukkhō ; o bhāīā ; o bhāīō ; o kādā ; o kādō (or kādō) ; o pādā ; o pādō ; o dāīā ; o dāīō ; o kandhā ; o kandhō ; o māwā (or māwō) ; o māwō (or māwō) ; o vidhāwā ; o vidhāwō . The nominative is sometimes used instead of the vocative. |
| bānīā , a shopkeeper | bānīē | bānīā | bānīā | |
| manukkhā , a man | manukkhā | manukkhā | manukkhā | |
| bhāīā , a brother | bhāīē | bhāīā | bhāīā | |
| kādā , a crow | kādā | kādā | kādā | |
| pādā , a father | pādā | pādā | pādā | |
| dāīā , a daughter | dāīē | dāīā , dāīē | dāīā , dāīē | |
| kandhā , a wall (fem.) | kandhā | kandhā | kandhā | |
| māwā , a mother | māwā | māwā | māwā | |
| vidhāwā , a widow | vidhāwā | vidhāwā | vidhāwā | |

There are also other cases occasionally met with, viz. an agent plural in ī as in tusī lōkī pāīā, you people have obtained ; a locative singular in ā, as in gharā, in the house ; chhāwā (from chhāwā), in the shade ; a locative plural in ī, as in gur-mukhī ākhkhā, in Gurumukhī letters ; an ablative singular in ī, as in gharī, from the house ; and an ablative plural in ī, as in hattī, by hands.

The case postpositions are,—

Agent—nai (often omitted)

Dat.-Acc.—nū

Instr.-Abl.—tī, tō, tā, tā, dō, by, with, from

Gen.—dā

Loc.—chhā, in ; pur, on ; pā, pā, near, nā, with.

Many of these may be used with the oblique genitive masc., as gharvichhā or gharā vichhā, in the house

NOTE.—Dā of the genitive is a termination rather than a postposition. It should hence be written without a hyphen. Thus, gharā, not ghar-dā, of a house. So also nai of the agent, and nū of the dative-accusative ; but ghar-pur, on the house, with a hyphen. Regarding the declension of the genitive, see Adjectives.

Adjectives.—Adjectives ending in ā and genitives agree with their qualified nouns in gender, number and form. Thus, nikkā munḍā, a good boy ; nikkā munḍiā, to a good boy, o nikkā munḍiā, O good boy ; nikkā munḍiā, good boys ; nikkā munḍiā, to good boys, o nikkā munḍiā, O good boys. nikkā kūrī, a good girl ; nikkā kūrī, to a good girl ; o nikkā kūrī, O good girl ; nikkā kūrī, good girls ; nikkā kūrī, to good girls ; ghōṛdā mūh, the horse's mouth ; ghōṛdā mūh-vichhā, in the horse's mouth ; ghōṛdā ākhkhā, the horse's eye ; ghōṛdā ākhkhā-vichhā, in the horse's eyes. The Hindōstānī system of using the termination ī for all oblique masculine cases, and ī for all feminine cases is also employed.

Comparison of adjectives is as in other Indian languages. Thus, ih us-tā wādā hai, this is greater than that ; ih sabhā-tā wādā hai, this is greatest of all.

¹ In colloquial Pañjabī we have tōd, tōdā, instead of tusā, tuhāqā.

Ap, self, has its genitive apnā. In the sense of 'Your Honour,' the use of the word is borrowed from Hindōstānī. The pronoun of the second person in the plural tusī.

Roots ending in a vowel or a form the pres. part. in nā. Thus, ānnā, coming; rahinnā, remaining; khānnā, eating; gāhannā, thrashing. Sometimes the pres. part. takes the termination nā. Thus, dēkhā, for dēkhā, seeing.

IV. NEGATIVE.—The usual negative particles are na, nā, nā̃, nañ, nañ̃, nañ̄. With the imperative we have usually nañ̄ and nañ̄̄, etc., are also employed. Mat is borrowed from Hindustani and is not true Pāṇini. A negative form of the past tense of the verb was, nañ̄̄, was not, which does not change for gender, number, or person. Sometimes we find nañ̄̄̄ and nañ̄̄̄̄.

DŌGRĀ OR DŌGRĪ.

The Dōgrā or Dōgrī dialect of Pañjābī takes its name from Dōgar or Dugar, the title of the submontane portion of the Jammu State. This portion of the Jammu State has to its north the hill country of Jammu separating it from Kashmir, in which a variety of dialects, such as Rāmbanī and Pōguli, intermediate between Dōgrā and Kāshmirī are spoken. These dialects in many respects closely resemble Dōgrā, but I have classed them with Kāshmirī as they present the regular use of pronominal suffixes attached to the verb which is characteristic of that language. In the hills in the north-east of the Jammu State lies Bhadarwāh, the language of which, Bhadarwāhī, is a form of Pahārī. To the east of Jammu lies the State of Chamba. The main language of Chamba, Chamēālī, is also a form of Pahārī ; but a mixed form of speech called Bhaṭēālī, which is based on Dōgrā, is spoken in the west of the State, near the Jammu Frontier. South of Jammu lie the Punjab districts of Sialkot and Gurdaspur, the main language of which is Pañjābī. Dōgrā is, however, spoken along the northern border of these districts. South-east of Jammu lies the district of Kangra ; here a dialect of Pañjābī is spoken which is closely allied to Dōgrā. Not far to the west of Jammu City runs the river Chenab, beyond which lies the Naushahra country. Dōgrā extends to a few miles beyond the Chenab. Further on we come to the hill dialects connected with the northern form of Lahndā.

The word Dōgar is popularly said to be a corruption of the Sanskrit Dvīgarta, but this derivation is not accepted by European scholars at the present day. On the contrary, the ancient name of the country appears to have been Durgara, from which 'Dōgar' is derived, through the Prakrit 'Doggara.'¹

As will have been gathered from the foregoing remarks, Dōgrā is bounded on the south by standard Pañjābī, on the east and north-east by Pahārī, on the north by the semi-Kāshmirī hill dialects, and on the west by Lahndā.

There are three sub-dialects of Dōgrā mentioned in the reports. These are Kaṇḍiālī, the Kāngrā Dialect, and Bhaṭēālī. Kaṇḍiālī is a mixture of standard Pañjābī and Dōgrā spoken in the hills of the north-east of Gurdaspur. The Kāngrā Dialect is the main language of the head-quarters tahsils of Kangra District, and Bhaṭēālī is spoken in Western Chamba. Like Kaṇḍiālī, the Kāngrā Dialect is a mixture of Dōgrā and standard Pañjābī, with also a few peculiarities of its own, while Bhaṭēālī is a mixture of Dōgrā, Kāngrī, and Chamēālī.

The following are the estimated number of speakers of Dōgrā in localities in which it is a vernacular :—

¹ See Dr. Stein's translation of the Rājatarāṅginī, Vol. II, p. 432. It will be observed that the initial ḍ of Dōgar has been cerebralised. This is an example of the influence of Lahndā, in some dialects of which an initial ḍ is often cerebralised. Thus in the Thālī of Shahpur, the root dā, give, becomes ḍā.

| | | | | | | | | | |
|-------------------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|-----------------------|
| Dōgrā Proper— | | | | | | | | | |

| Bhaṭṭālī | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 14,000 |
| TOTAL | | | | | | | | | <hr/> 1,229,227 <hr/> |

In the above table, the figures for Jammu are mere estimates, based on the returns of the Census for 1901, as no language census was taken of that State in 1891. The Gurdaspur and Sialkot figures are better estimates, being based by the local officers on the returns of the Census of 1891. The Bhaṭṭālī figures are those reported by the Chamba officials. In Gurdaspur Dōgrā is spoken nearly all over the lower hills, and in Sialkot it is spoken in 116 villages of Zafarwal Tahsil to the north and west of Zafarwal, and all over the Bajwat 'Alāqa of the Sialkot Tahsil.

No information is available as to the number of speakers of Dōgrā outside the region in which it is a vernacular.

Dōgrā closely resembles standard Pañjābī. The main differences consist in the change in oblique form of the noun substantive, and in the employment of a different postposition for the accusative-dative case. The vocabulary, too, differs somewhat, being influenced by Lahndā and (especially) Kāshmīrī. As regards the oblique form, all masculine nouns add a short e or ai in the singular to the nominative, while feminine nouns add ā, thus following the example of northern Lahndā. For the accusative-dative case, the usual suffix is kī or gī, instead of the Pañjābī nā. In Kāngrā an alternative suffix is jō. Dōgrā also prefers the word thā to mean 'was', instead of the more usual sā or sī of standard Pañjābī.

So far as I am aware the only Dōgrā book which has been printed is a version of the New Testament in 'Jumboo or Dogura' issued by the Serampore Missionaries in the year 1826. There are said to be some translations of Sanskrit books into Dōgrā, one of which, a version of the Lilāvati (a mathematical work) is mentioned by Dr. Bühler.¹

The only previous account of the Dōgrā dialect which I have seen is contained in the following:—

DREW, FREDERIC,—The Jumboo and Kashmir Territories A Geographical Account. London, 1875. Account of Dogrī, pp. 463 ff. Dogrī Alphabet described, p. 471. Appendix I (pp. 503 ff.), Dogrī Grammar.

Dōgrā has an alphabet of its own, which is allied to the Tākri alphabet current in the Punjab Himalayas. Some thirty or forty years ago, the then Mahārājā of Jammu and Kashmir caused to be invented a modified form of the current Tākri so as to bring it more into line with Dēvanāgarī and Gurmukhī. This improved Dōgrī is used for official documents, but it has not generally displaced the old Tākri form of script, which is that employed in the following specimens. This alphabet is very imperfect. Theoretically it has all the letters found in Dēvanāgarī except a few which are not employed in the vernacular language, but the vowels are so loosely written, that it might almost be said that any vowel sign can be employed indifferently for any vowel sound. More especially, e and i, and o and u are frequently confounded. At other times we find vowels omitted altogether, so that the reading of a Dōgrā document is no easy task.

There is another peculiarity in Dōgrā writing which should be observed. It is the very frequent employment of the initial forms of vowels instead of the non-initial forms in order to represent non-initial long vowels. It is as if in Dēvanāgarī we were to write ददा when we meant to write दा. An examination of the specimens will show instances of this in every line. In order to indicate this, in transliterating the specimens, I insert an apostrophe before every vowel which is written in the initial form. It is as if I were to transliterate ददा by d'ā and दा by dā.

In order to facilitate the reading of the text I have, whenever a word is wrongly spelt, first transliterated it strictly as it is written and have then immediately afterwards transliterated the correct spelling which I place between marks of parenthesis. I have, however, altogether ignored the very frequent use of a long vowel for a short one, or vice versa. Such cases I have passed over silently in the transliteration. Dōgrā has never been printed in type of its own character. I therefore give the specimens in the vernacular character in facsimile just as I have received them. Types are, however, available for the form of Ṭākṛī employed in the adjoining State of Chamba, which is closely allied to that used for Dōgrā, and, as type-printed words are easier to read than facsimiles of handwriting, I give in each case the specimen also printed (in correct spelling) in the Ṭākṛī type of Chamba.

The printed Chamba Tākri alphabet is as follows:—

Vowels.

ਠ a ਠ ਆ ਚਿ ਚਿ ਚੁ ਚੁ

Numerals.

੦ 1, ੧ 2, ੨ 3, ੪ 4, ੫ 5, ੬ 6,
 ੭ 7, ੮ 8, ੯ 9, • 0.

Double letters are never written. They are left to be inferred by the reader. Thus, dittā, given, is written ਢਿਤ ਦਿਤਾ, but must be read dittā.

The following are the Dōgrā characters as used in the specimens :—

Vowels.

INITIAL FORMS.

ਅ a, ਆ ā, ਓ i or ī, ਊ u or ū, ਏ or ਈ e, ē or ai, ਓ ਓ or au, ਓ or ~

NON-INITIAL FORMS.

ਕ ka, ਕā, ਕਿ or ਕī, ਕੁ or ਕੂ, ਕੁ ਕੁ, ਕੇ or ਕੇ,
 ਕੈ kai, ਕੋ kō, ਕੌ kau, ਕਾ kash or kã.

NOTE.—Great carelessness is allowed in writing the vowels and the nasal sign. They are often omitted altogether. Long and short vowels are frequently interchanged. Initial vowels are often written in the place of non-initial long ones. Thus—ਅ for ਆ dā; ਓ for ਓ ਓ. The letter e or ē is frequently written for i, and ī for u.

Consonants.

ਕ ka, ਖ kha, ਗ ga, ਘ gha, ਙ na;
 ਚ cha, ਚ ਚ, ਜ ja, ਜ ਜ, ਜ ਜ;
 ਤ ta, ਠ tha, ਡ da, ਢ dha, ਣ na;
 ਪ pa, ਫ pha, ਫ fa, ਭ bha, ਮ ma;
 ਯ ya, ਰ ra, ਲ la, ਵ va, ਵਾ;
 ਝ zha, ਸ sa, ਹ ha, ਝ ra.

NOTE.—That the same sign is employed for ja and ga, and for ba and va (or wa), respectively. There is really only one sibilant,—the letter sa. When it is necessary to represent the sound of the Persian gh, the character for chha is employed.

In order to facilitate comparison, I next give the current written forms of the letters of the Gurmukhī, Kāṅgrā, and Dōgrā alphabets.

DŌGRĀ GRAMMAR.

In its grammar Dōgrā closely resembles standard Pañjābī. The following are two main points of difference :—

In pronunciation, no difference seems to exist between e and ai. These two vowels appear to be quite interchangeable. Sometimes one is written and sometimes the other. At the end of a word (especially in the declension of nouns) both are pronounced short and both have the same sound, which more nearly resembles that of a short a than anything else. Indeed ā is often written for it. In the skeleton grammar which follows I represent this final sound by e, but ai or ā would be equally correct. Similarly ē is often written ai or ā.

All nouns, even those ending in consonants, have an oblique form singular differing from the nominative. In the case of masculine nouns, this oblique form usually ends in the indeterminate short vowel, sometimes written e, sometimes ai, sometimes ā, which has just been described. The termination of the feminine oblique form singular is ā. These terminations also occur in the northern dialects of Lahndā and in Western Pahārī. The termination of the oblique plural is ē, ai or ā. The postposition of the accusative-dative is generally kī or gī, and very rarely the Pañjābī nū. Sometimes de (the locative of the genitive termination dā) is employed for the dative, as in jāedāti-wālede jāi, having gone to a rich man. The other postpositions coincide with those in use in Pañjābī.

The Pronouns do not call for any special remarks unless we draw attention to the form of the accusative-dative of the pronouns of the first, second, and third persons. 'Me' is mikī, migī, or mī; 'thee' is tukī, or tugī; and 'him' is usi. Similarly the accusative-dative of 'this' is isī. The conjugation of verbs presents a few irregularities. There is an alternative form ending in dā, of the past participle. Thus, mōīdā, dead; gōāchādā, lost; chāhīdī-hai, it is proper; giādā-thā, it was gone. The addition of the postposition of the genitive to a past participle without altering its meaning occurs in other hill languages; e.g. in Eastern and Western Pahārī. The future has several forms which are strange to standard Pañjābī. The syllable che or chai is added to the Imperative to give a permissive force. Thus, khāchai, let us eat; manāchai, let us celebrate. In the word khāden, they (were) eating, the final n is a pronominal suffix meaning 'they,' added to the verb in imitation of Kāshmīrī. There are occasional instances of neuter participles as in chūmiā, it was kissed.

It is hoped that the above remarks will be sufficient to enable the student to read the Dōgrā specimens, with the aid of the Skeleton Grammar which follows.

DŌGRĀ SKELETON GRAMMAR.

I. NOUNS. Gender.—This follows standard Pañjābī.

Number and Case :—

| Singular. | | Plural. | |
|----------------------------|----------------|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Direct. | Oblique. | Direct. | Oblique. |
| Masc.— | | | |
| lauhrā , a boy. | lauhre | lauhre. | lauhrē. |
| babbā , a father. | babbē. | babbā or babbāṭ. | babbā or babbāṭ. |
| ḡaṅgar , an ox | ḡaṅgre. | ḡaṅgar | ḡaṅgrē. |
| Fem.— | | | |
| bakrī , a she-goat. | bakrīā. | bakrīā. | bakrīē. |

The terminations e of the oblique singular, and ē of the oblique plural are short. They are often written a or ā, and aṭ or āṭ, respectively. Thus, sahbēdā, sahbaidā, or sahbādā, of the sāhib. However written, the pronunciation resembles that of a short a or ā, respectively.

Two cases are formed without postpositions,—the Vocative and (optionally) the Accusative-dative. The following are the forms of the Vocative :—Sing., lauhre or ā lauhrā; ḡaṅgrā or ā ḡaṅgar; bakrīā or ā bakrī; Plur., ā lauhrē; ā babbāṭ, ā ḡaṅgrē; ā bakrīāṭ.

The optional forms of the Accusative-Dative are :—Sing., lauhrēi; babbāṭi; ḡaṅgrēi; bakrīāṭi; Plur., lauhrēṭi; babbāṭi; ḡaṅgrēṭi; bakrīāṭi.

The Postpositions are,—Acc-dat., kī or gī, kachh, to; Instr., kane, by; Abl., thwā, thē, kachhā, from; Gen., dā, as in standard Pañjābī, obl. masc. also dai; Loc., vich, in; pās, near; par, on; Agent, ne or naṭ, by.

Adjectives ending in ā are thus declined. Masc. Sing., direct, kālā, black; oblique, kālē; Plur., direct, kālē; obl., kālē; Fem. Sing., direct, kālī; obl., kālīā; Plur., direct, kālīā; obl., kālīē. In other respects adjectives are treated as in standard Pañjābī.

Kōka, declined regularly as an adjective, is 'which ?' The reflexive pronoun is apā; Gen., apnā; Acc.-dat., apn-kī, -gī, Abl., apne-thuā; Loc., apne-vich; Agent, apā. The plural is the same as the singular.

III. VERBS.—A.—Auxiliary Verbs and Verbs Substantive.

Present Tense, 'I am, etc.'—

| | Singular. | Plural. | |
|---|-----------------|----------------------|---|
| 1 | hā, ā. | hāi, hē, aī, ē. | The past tense is thā , or sā , which, as usual, is treated like an adjective. Thus, masc. plur. thē , fem. sing. thī ; fem. plur. thiā . 'I was' is sā . |
| 2 | hāi, hē, aī, ē. | hō, ō. | |
| 3 | hai, he, ai, e | hāi, hē, aī, ē, haun | |

B.—Active Verb.

Root,—mār, strike.

Infinitive,—mārnā, to strike

Present Participle,—mārdā or mārnā, striking

Past Participle,—(1) māriā, struck; fem. māri, Plur. masc. māre; fem. māriā.

(2) māriā or māriā, etc.

Conjunctive Participle,—māri-ke, mārie, or māriai, having struck.

Noun of Agency,—mārne-wālā, a striker.

| Present Subjunctive and old Present Indicative. | | | Future. | |
|---|---------------|----------------------|----------------------------------|--|
| 'I may strike,' 'I strike,' etc. | | | 'I shall strike,' etc. | |
| | Singular. | Plural. | Singular. | Plural. |
| 1 | māiā . | māiē, māiche. | mārañ. | māran, māre (fem. -giā). |
| 2 | māiē. | māiō. | mārga (fem. -gī). | mārgiō, māre (fem. -giā). |
| 3 | māre. | māiē, māren. | mārag | mārgā, mārgan, māringe, mārañgan. |

Instead of mārgā (-gī) we may have mārgā (-ghī), and, instead of māre (-giā), mārghe (-ghīā).

Imperative, mār, strike thou; māiō, strike ye; māiche, māichai, let me, thee, him, us, you, them, strike.

Participial Tenses.

āi mārdā, or mārnā, I strike, (if) I had struck.

āi mārdā-ā, mārnā-ā, I am striking.

āi mārdā-sā, mārnā-sā, I was striking.

mā māriā, I struck (him).

mā māriā-e, I have struck (him).

mā māriā-sā, I had struck (him).

Irregular Past Participles.

hōnā, to become, Past part. hōā, or huā (Pres. part. hūadā).

jānā, to go, Past part. giā.

karnā, to do, Past part. kīlā or kariā.

dēnā, to give, Past part. diā.

lēnā, to take, Past part. līā.

The Passive Voice is formed with jānā, as in Panjabi.
Causals and Double Causals are formed as in Panjabi.

STANDARD PAÑJĀBĪ.

In order to illustrate the standard Pañjābī described in the preceding grammatical sketch, I here give the Parable of the Prodigal Son taken from the version of the Gospel of St. Luke published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The translation is an excellent one, but should not be taken as representing, in all its purity, the Pañjābī of the Mājh. The standard of the grammatical sketch is rather a refined version of the Pañjābī spoken in the Pōwādh¹ of the District of Ludhiana, which differs slightly from the Pañjābī of Amritsar.

In the declension of nouns, the initial v of the postposition vich, in, is often elided, and the remainder of the postposition is attached to the main word as a termination, as in gharich, for ghar-vich, in the house. The postposition of the agent case is nai or naĩ. Note relics of old neuters as in āpnā dhan, chummiā, etc., quoted above.

VOL. IX, PART I.

Note also false genders, caused by attraction, in phrases like ihdī hatthī, on this one's hand. Note, moreover, that hatthī is used in the singular.

In the pronouns, the nasal of asī, we, and tusī, you, is omitted, so that we have asi and tusi. Other forms not shown in the grammar are maīnaī, by me; sāḍḍā, our; taīnaī, by thee; tuhāḍḍā, your. Tū, thou, often has its oblique singular tudh. The oblique plural of the pronoun of the third person is unā, not unhā.

In the verb substantive, we have haī and han, both meaning both 'we are' and 'they are.' The past tense has the following forms:—

| | Sing. | Plur. |
|----|------------|------------|
| 1. | sā | sā |
| 2. | saī | sau |
| 3. | sī | sē |

The present participle of finite verbs often ends in nā instead of dā. Thus, mārnā-hā, I am striking.

Irregular forms noted are dēu, give thou; dēh, give; jāh, go; jāwāḡā, I will go. Āunda or āndā is 'coming.'

In one important point these specimens do not illustrate the dialect of the Mājhi. This is the occasional use of personal terminations with the past tenses of verbs. This is properly a characteristic of the outer circle of languages, and does not belong to Pañjābī, as illustrated in the grammars. On the other hand, it regularly appears in Lahndā, and, as explained in the introduction to this section, there is a Lahndā basis at the bottom of Pañjābī, which is almost concealed by the language of the Inner Group that has established itself in the Central and Eastern Punjab. As we go westwards from the old Sarasvatī, the Lahndā basis becomes more and more prominent, and hence we occasionally find these terminations in Mājhi. In Mājhi they are only found in the third person of transitive verbs, and are, for the singular, us, ōs, or ōsu, and, for the plural, ōnē. Thus, instead of the regular us ākhiā, he said, we frequently hear ākhiōs, and instead of unhā (or unā) ākhiā, they said, ākhiōnē. So dittōs, he gave; kahiōs, he said; kitōsu, he did; mannius, he heeded; dittōnē, they gave; kitōnē, they did.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

(Sāhbān, beloved of Mirzā the Jatt, finds his corpse under a jand tree, being eaten by crows. She reproaches them.)

1. When they heard Sāhbān's words, the crows became ashamed. ‘When our wings could not carry us further, and we were compelled by hunger, we pecked at his body.

2. ‘It is not our custom to leave untouched the flesh of a corpse, and so when we came here we ate it. We had no special bond of love with him, nor had we exchanged turbans in token of brotherhood.

3. ‘He thought thee to be good and faithful, and seated thee (by his hearth), but thou hast stolen the unbaked dough.’ Mad one, thy beauteous body will some day be burnt to ashes.

4. ‘Slight not thou him whose salt thou hast eaten. If thou hadst been a daughter of a noble caste, thou wouldst have hanged thyself from the jand tree at whose foot thy lover lieth.

5. ‘When thou heardest of his death thou didst sit with thy face turned away from him, while the grave is calling to thee, “To me, to me, must thou come.”

6. ‘Forsake thou the false home of this world, and seek thou the true home of death. There is but one struggle, the last one, left for thee. Cast thou the funeral water on thy form.’

7. ‘The Jatt is dead, and thou art still alive. For this may a hundred thousand curses light on thee.’ When she heard the taunts of the crows, Sāhbān drew her dagger and killed herself.

8. Their bodies remained lying under the jand tree, but their souls went to heaven. No one cried alas! for them, for their bodies lay unrecognised as those of passing travellers in a foreign land.

9. Had he had brothers they would have come to share his sorrows. The Jatt died brotherless, and no one came to help him.

Alas, Return thou, Mirzā!

¹ The crows mean that Mirzā had no special claim of affection on them, but that he had upon her. That she was avoiding the payment of this claim by not killing herself by his corpse. He had thought her faithful, but, by her being still alive, she was showing herself unfaithful. She was like a faithless wife, whom her husband puts in charge of the oven, and who, instead of baking the bread, steals the unbaked dough and eats it. Why hesitate to die. She must die some day.

² An allusion to the washing of a Musalman's body before burial.

The following ballad deals with the marriage of Nau Nihāl Singh in 1837 A.D. The Kharak Singh mentioned in the poem was the successor of Ranjit Singh, and reigned for three months, being deposed by his son Nau Nihāl Singh in 1840. Kharak Singh did not die on the battle field but in his bed, and there were suspicions that he was poisoned.

Nau Nihāl married Jas-kaur, the daughter of Shām Singh of Atari, who afterwards died gallantly fighting the British at Sobraon in 1846. This is probably the 'black fate' referred to in verse 4.

Nau Nihāl himself was killed on the day of his father's cremation by an archway falling upon him.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

1. The month of Chait has commenced, and showers have fallen. My friends, great is the might of the (Sikh) Government. Kābul and Qandahār tremble before it, and its tents are pitched beyond the Indus.¹

2. Kharak Singh is a mighty chief. Why art thou sitting at home, forgetting the death (that thou shouldst earn on the battlefield)? He arose in the firmness of his soul, for in the end all must die.

3. After Chait has come the first of the month of Baisākh, and well is the Government pleased. One by one come the glorious elephants. Men receive presents and gifts; and, in the train of the Government, start the troops with their chiefs.

4. There are seated the men of Atārī²; made to sit are they in seats of honour. Black is the fate before them, money do they give forth, each piece weighing a rupee. No delay show they in their starting.

5. Rānī Jaskaur was born in (Shām Singh's) house. Bashful of eye was she, and very modest. High was her fate written as one of lofty deeds, and (at her birth) trays full of pice were cast away in charity.

6. (The searchers for a husband³ went forth, saying) 'wisdom comes to one born in Baisākh. A daughter has been born in Shām Singh's house,' as they sought (for a fitting mate for) her betrothal. From the Government did her nurse receive a whole tract of country for her reward.

7. Now the month of Jēth has risen, and Prince Kaur Nau Nihāl has mounted the basket.⁴ Jointly do his sisters-in-law seize the red cloth, and thereby enhance his beauty. Pleased is the heart of the Rānī Jaskaur, as they invoke good omens.

8. Then became ready the marriage procession, and the Sardār of the Mājha mounted his horse. All the members of the procession shone like a garden, as they made their steeds curvet through the bazaar. Then the bridegroom donned his sword, and leaped full-armed upon his horse. Glorious indeed then was the procession.⁵

9. Then he bathed, and sat down after putting on his wedding garments. The priest came and applied the tilak-mark to his forehead. His father put on his head the wedding chaplet, and all the bride's playmates sang songs of joy, invoking happy omens.

10. Then became ready the procession (home to the bridegroom's house). Governors of the country round rode in it innumerable. They put on magnificent apparel and were girt with swords, as they scattered to the throng gold coins innumerable. The marriage-menials took them up and became wealthy, while the Musalmān and Hindū mendicants with their families gathered alms in the name of The Great Forgiver. In return they gave blessings, as they worshipped the Almighty, and cried, 'may your storehouse be ever full.'

² The name of a village near Amritsar. Atārī-wālā is a family name. The Atārī-wālā are Shām Singh and his relations.

³ A lāgi or lāgi is a functionary at a marriage who is entitled to fees. Most of them are menials. Here the gobetweens who arrange the marriage are specially alluded to.

⁴ The marriage ceremony of the young couple is being described. At one period the bride and bridegroom sit on a basket and are bathed. Another part of the ceremony consists in the female relations of the bridegroom seizing his cloth, which they refuse to let go till each is given a present.

⁵ The order of events is not followed. This procession is that in which the bridegroom comes to the bride's home. On this occasion he comes armed, on horseback, with a small boy, to act as a squire, behind him. This looks like a survival of the old fashion of marriage by capture.

PAÑJĀBĪ OF THE JULLUNDUR DOAB.

The Jullundur Doab, or the country lying between the rivers Beas and Sutlej, includes the two districts of Jullundur and Hoshiarpur and the state of Kapurthala. The Pañjābī of this tract is locally known as Dōabī, but it differs hardly at all from the standard Pañjābī of Ludhiana.

In the hills to the north and east of Hoshiarpur there is a dialect locally called Pahārī, which on examination turns out to be nearly the same as ordinary Dōābī, only having a slight admixture of the idioms spoken in the Simla Hill States and in Kangra. The same dialect is spoken in the adjoining Simla Hill States of Kahlur (or Bilaspur) and Mangal, and is there known as Kahlūrī or Bilāspurī. We therefore arrive at the following estimate of the number of speakers of Dōābī in its various forms:—

| | | | | | | | | | |
|--------------------|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|-----------|
| Ordinary Deabi— | | | | | | | | | |
| Jullundur | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 905,817 |
| Kapurthala | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 296,976 |
| Hoshiarpur | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 848,655 |
| | | | | | | | | | <hr/> |
| | | | | | | | | | 2,051,448 |
| Hosiarpur Pahāri | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 114,540 |
| Kahlūri of Kahlur | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 91,700 |
| Kahlūri of Mangal. | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | . | 1,081 |
| | | | | | | | | | <hr/> |
| | | | | | | | | | 207,321 |
| TOTAL | | | | | | | | | 2,258,769 |

As a specimen of the ordinary Dōābī, I give a conversation between two villagers received from Hoshiarpur. The following remarks on the few peculiarities of the dialect are mainly based on this specimen, but also on other specimens received from other parts of the Doab.

The spelling is capricious. Thus we have both vich and bich, in ; hundā and hōndā, being. The letter y is often inserted after i before another vowel, or else substituted for the i. Thus, hōiā, or hōyā, become ; hōndiyā, being (fem. plur.). In many cases short i is substituted for long ī, as in hōiā for hōīā (fem. pl.). Cerebral letters are employed capriciously. Thus, baḷd, a bullock, but nāl, not nāl̄, with. So, hōnā, not hōnā̄, to be ; ānā, to come ; bijnā, to sow. Double letters at the end of a word are simplified. Thus, vich, not vichch, in, but vichchō, from in ; gal, not gall, a thing, a word, plur. gallā ; hath, not hatth, a hand ; ghaṭ for ghaṭṭ, decrease.

In kamin-kān, we have kān used as a sign for the dative. Compare the Lahndā kan. Kuj is 'anything,' not kujh. As in Amritsar, 'these' is inā, not inhā.

The form hai for the first person singular of the present of the verb substantive is peculiar to this part of the Punjab.

Note the contracted form gaiyyā, gone (plur. fem.).

The initial consonant of vich, in, is often elided, as in Amritsar and Ludhiana.

A CONVERSATION BETWEEN BHĀNĀ AND WARYĀMĀ.

Bhānā.—Brother, where have you come from ?

Waryāmā.—I am coming from the house of my son's father-in-law. I had heard of a bullock there which I thought would suit me. It is a good beast but is apt to gore people. Its horns are like needles, its colour light, and its teeth two in number. But they are asking too much for it. They want forty rupees, and I can't afford to spend that amount of money. Brother, in these hard times how could I ? The crop failed. From three *kanāls*¹ of land I only got four bundles altogether. What is there in that for us to eat and to pay our labourers ? Why, there is not even enough for the cost of cutting it. It's like the proverb—

'the singer sings till her throat bursts, and not a seer of flour falls into her outstretched scarf. When a cultivator loses his luck, his bullocks die, and he gets a scarcity on the top of it.'

I killed myself working for six months, and then all I see is the face of these four bundles. My hands are chafed and my throat is hoarse from the labour of irrigating. Yet what was God's will ? First poverty, then calamity. Even the few bundles I did reap had hardly any grain in them. I don't know what came of the grain, for it's beyond me to understand God's ways. Brother Bhānā, that cold blast in Phālgun made the wheat unproductive. What could the poor grains do, when the One above sits silently, and does nothing to protect them. Ever since we sowed the spring crop, He hasn't cared whether the cultivators were living or dead. In the first place there is no blessing on the earnings of those who have worked so hard, and in the second place the wheat has been thin because we had not enough hands to plough on account of my old grandfather's illness. The wheat would have been a fine crop, if it had had a thorough ploughing. Just see the outturn when you plough your wheat twelve times. The more you plough it, the better the flavour. You know the old proverb—

'Sow your wheat and sugarcane thick, and your cotton a stick's distance between each plant. But maize must be so far apart that a man with a blanket cowl on his head can walk through it without touching it.'

So, brother, the ploughing and sowing of wheat is a difficult job. If the ploughing and sowing is good, the outturn will be good, and the crop of wheat will be a dense one.

KAHLŪRĪ OR BILĀSPURĪ.

The languages of most of the Simla Hill States are various forms of Western Pahārī. The most western states are Kahlur, Mangal, Nalagarh, and Mailog. In the west of the two latter states the language is Pōwādhī Pañjābī, and will be dealt with under that head. The dialect of their eastern parts is Haṇḍūrī Pahārī. The dialect of the states of Kahlur and Mangal is called Kahlūrī or Bilāspurī (Bilāspur being the chief town of Kahlur). Kahlur lies immediately to the east of the Hoshiarpur District. In the adjoining hilly part of that district a dialect is spoken which is locally called Pahārī. It is the same as Kahlūrī.¹

Kahlūrī has hitherto been described as a form of Western Pahārī. An examination of the specimen will show that this is not the case. It is simply a rude Pañjābī, similar to that spoken in Hoshiarpur. The estimated number of its speakers is as follows:—

|-------------------------------|---------|
| Kahlur State | 91,700 |
| Mangal State | 1,081 |
| Hoshiarpur District | 114,540 |
| TOTAL | 207,321 |

It is unnecessary to give full specimens of this dialect. A few sentences from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, given in transliteration, will show its character.

¹ Towards the North-East of Hoshiarpur, the dialect rather approaches that of Kangra. Thus it has the Kangra dative postposition ḡḡ.

PŌWĀDHĪ.

The word 'Pōwādh' means 'East,' and Pōwādhī Pañjābī is the Pañjābī spoken in that portion of the Eastern Punjab known as the Pōwādh.

From Rūpar in the Umballa District up to its junction with the Beas, the river Sutlej runs nearly east and west. To its north lies the Jullundur Dōāb. To its south lie the Districts of Ludhiana and Ferozepore. The whole of the latter district, and the greater portion of the former are included in the tract known as the Mālwa, but that part of Ludhiana which lies near the river is known as the Pōwādh. The Pōwādh extends much further east. In Umballa, it reaches as far, speaking roughly, as the river Ghaggar, beyond which the language is Hindōstānī. To the south it occupies those parts of the states of Patiala, Nabha and Jind which lie east of, say, the 76th degree of east longitude, up to the country in which Hindōstānī and Bāngarū are spoken. This tract also includes a few outlying portions of the Hissar District. The Musalmān Pachhādās who live along the banks of the Ghaggar where it runs through this area speak another dialect of Pañjābī known as Rāthī, which will be dealt with separately.

South of this tract lies the District of Hissar, the main languages of which are Bāngarū and Bāgrī. Only along the Ghaggar, and in a part of the Sirsa Tahsīl do we find Pañjābī. With the above exceptions the country to the west of the 76th degree of east longitude, as far as the combined Sutlej and Beas, is known either as the Mālwa, or as the Jaṅgal (i.e. backwoods), which has a dialect of its own entitled Mālwaī, that will be described in due course.

|---|-----------|
| Hissar | 148,352 |
| Umballa | 337,123 |
| Kalsia State | 18,933 |
| Nalagarh State (western half) | 39,545 |
| Mailog State (western half) | 3,193 |
| Patiala State | 537,000 |
| Jind State | 13,000 |
| TOTAL | 1,397,146 |

The figures for Kalsia refer to speakers near Dera Bassi, within the boundaries of the Umballa District. Nalagarh and Mailog are two of the Simla Hill States which lie close to Umballa District. Pañjābī is spoken in their western portions. In their eastern areas the language is the Haṇḍūrī form of Western Pahārī.

As might be expected, Pōwādhī differs from the standard Pañjābī of Amritsar mainly in approaching the dialects of Western Hindī spoken in East Umballa and in Karnal. The further east we go the more and more infected with Hindōstānī or Bāngarū does it become. As usual there is no distinct line between them, the languages insensibly merging into each other. The most western Pōwādhī—that spoken in the Pōwādh tract of Ludhiana—is almost the same as the standard, and has indeed served as a foundation for most of the grammars of the language, rather than the Pañjābī of Amritsar. No special examples of this form of Pōwādhī are necessary.

For Pōwādhī I give two specimens from Thana Kularan in the Jind state, the first being a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a folktale. I also give a folktale from West Umballa, written in the Dēva-nāgarī character, and another from Thana Karamgarh in the state of Patiala, written in the Persian character. On pp. 806 ff. will be found a List of Words and Sentences from Umballa. These specimens illustrate very fairly the variations which Pañjābī undergoes in the Pōwādh tract.

Most of these are due to the influence of the neighbouring Western Hindī. Such are the occasional use of words like āgē instead of aggē, before, and of kahnā instead of ākhnā, to say. So also we have the substitution of m for w between two vowels, as in āmāgā for āwāgā, I will come.

We find (as in Western Hindī dialects and in Rājasthānī), the locative of the genitive employed to form a dative, as in īhdē pāō, put on (pāo) to him (īhdē).

In pronouns, we find the forms hamāññū, to us; tumāññū, to you, alongside of the true Pañjābī forms; and the genitive of the reflexive pronoun is apnā, not āpnā. Jad is used for both 'then' and 'when,' exactly as in the dialects of Western Hindī and as in Rājasthānī.

In verbs, thā is more common for 'he was' than sī, though both are used. The first person plural sometimes ends in the Western Hindī āī, instead of in ā. Thus, hōwaī, let us become; chhakaī, let us eat.

Other peculiarities not so directly traceable to the influence of Western Hindī are the following. The insertion of an aspirate in bhalad (Patiala), an ox. The use of the neuter (occasionally also found in standard Pañjābī) in words like chummiā, it was kissed. The pronunciation of vichch, in, as bichch. The frequent dropping of the first syllable of this word as in khūhchō for khūh-bichchō, from in the well; unhāchō, from among them. In pronouns, the occasional employment of tōhāḍā for 'your,' and of ōh, for the oblique form singular of the third personal pronoun. Also the frequent transposition of an aspirate, as in unhū, for uhnū, to them; ōdhā, for ōhdā, of him; īdhā, for īhdā, of this; jērhā, for jēhṛā, who.

In the verb substantive the 2nd plural of the present tense is often ō, for hō, you are.

There was a robber who came to this country. On his way home it came into his head that he would buy some four or five rupees' worth of cotton. So he turned back and entering a village saw an old woman sitting spinning. He asked her if she would sell him any cotton. She replied, 'brother, call that shopkeeper.' So he brought the shopkeeper, and the old woman told the latter to weigh the cotton. Then said the robber, 'what if I have bribed this shopkeeper with four or five annas to give more than the proper weight? Why don't you weigh it yourself? Otherwise you may be sorry for your bargain.' The old woman said, 'I'll get it from you in the next world.' 'Who,' said the robber, 'has seen the next world?' 'I,' said she, 'have both been there and have seen it.' 'How was that?' said he. She replied, 'my daughter and my son-in-law used to live near me. My cow-buffalo was in calf and consequently gave no milk. They had a cow which had calved, and was therefore in milk, and so I asked her to lend me a seer of ghee, which I would repay as soon as my cow gave milk. She lent it me. Shortly after this she died, and I paid a visit to Hades. There my daughter caught hold of me, and demanded back the seer of ghee which I had borrowed. "Bless you," said I, "I have nothing with me here. Your husband lives near my house, and I'll pay him when I get home." She replied, "he has nothing to do with it. It was I who gave it you. Pay me back my own." So I had to give her a seer of flesh out of my thigh before she would let me go. Look, here is the actual cavity from which she took it. You go on with your traffic and take your cotton. I'll be paid in the next world.' When the robber heard these words he was converted, and did not take the cotton. He went straight home, distributed all his ill-gotten wealth in charity to Brāhmans and beggars, and gave up the profession of a robber.

The following specimen of Pōwādhī comes from Umballa. It is given, as originally written, in the Dēva-nāgarī character.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain weaver awoke at midnight, and asked his wife to prepare a poppy-drink¹ for him. She replied that it was out of the question for to think of getting up at that time of night. He said, 'if you'll make me some poppy-drink, I'll tell you four things, each worth a thousand rupees.' So she got up and prepared the poppy-drink and gave it to him, and also filled his hookah for him. Then the weaver began to tell her the four things. It chanced that just then the son of the king² of that city was passing by in the lane near the weaver's house. He heard what the latter was saying, and thought to himself that he had better stop to hear what this valuable information was. This is what he heard. The weaver began, 'Firstly, the man who lets his grown up wife stay in her father's house is a fool. Secondly, the man who makes friends with a greater man than himself is a fool. Thirdly, the man who becomes an arbitrator without being asked is a fool. Fourthly, the man who sets out on a journey without first tying some money in the edge of his cloth is a fool.' Having said this the weaver went to sleep.

¹ It is made by rubbing poppy-heads in water.

² The Jalākā or weaver is the stock fool of Indian legend. The point here is that the prince takes the trouble to listen to what such a man says, and is rewarded by the exceedingly trite remarks which the latter conveys to his wife.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

See how he goes along carrying his plough-handle under his left arm, with his ox-whip in his right hand. He has set down, at the foot of a tree, his hookah and a water-jar, and his little boy is seated beside them. The poor cultivator has risen from his bed while there is still a little of the night left, and with his plough and oxen reaches his field at dawn. At midday, when the sun is over his head, his wife brings him his food. He unyokes his plough and throws some fodder before his oxen. As for himself, he washes his hands and his mouth to make himself cool, and takes his meal. Then he waters his oxen, and after that takes a very little rest. His wife gathers wild herbs for spinach and takes them home, but he has still much work to do. He keeps on at the same business of ploughing till evening, or else he betakes himself to some other occupation. When the sun begins to set he takes his plough and his oxen home, carrying on his head a bundle of fodder which he has cut. Then he throws some of the fodder before the oxen, while his wife milks the cows. Then she cooks the evening meal, and he sits down to eat it happily surrounded by his children. Then he stretches out his legs and goes to sleep with more pleasure than ever was the lot of kings upon their beds of flowers.

RĀTHĪ.

The Musalmān tribes, which are said to have come from the west, and who are now settled in the Ghaggar valley in the district of Hissar, are known as Pachhādā, or westerners, and also as Rāṭh, or the ruthless ones. As their second name indicates, they are a turbulent lot. Their language is known as Pachhādī or Rāṭhī. A similar language is spoken in the Ghaggar valley in the Kularan thānā of the Jind state. Here it is called Jānd or Naili. Naili is probably the same as nālī, which is the local name of the Ghaggar valley. I do not know the origin of the name Jānd, unless it refers to the jaṇḍ bush which is a very prominent object in this wild tract.

Under whatever name it is called, Pachhādī, Rāṭhī, Jāṇḍ, or Nailī, it is the same form of speech, i.e., Pōwādhī Pañjābī, strongly mixed with the Bāṅgarū dialect of Western Hindī spoken immediately to its east. The pronunciation is fond of nasal sounds. Here and there we meet a form borrowed from the Mālwaī Pañjābī spoken immediately to the west.

The number of speakers reported is—

[illegible]

I give three specimens of this dialect, viz., a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son and a folktale from Hissar, and another folktale from Jind. These show sufficiently the mixed character of the dialect. As might be expected, the Jind specimen has more Western Hindī in it than the others.

It is unnecessary to discuss this mixed form of speech at any length. It is sufficient to note that the genitive is sometimes formed by adding kā, and sometimes by adding dā. The oblique form (or locative) of the genitive mērē, is used to mean 'to me'; so jāt-kē, to a Jāt. The sign of the dative is nū or nē. Sometimes we have the Bāṅgarū sā, I am; sai, he is. The termination gī is used in the present as well as in the future. Thus, āēgī, she comes; the Mālwaī future jāsū, I will go, occurs. The past participle of ghallnā, to send, is ghattā, not ghalliā.

Note the nasal pronunciation of châhâdâ, wishing; âûdâ, coming; jâsû, I will go, and the substitution of a dental dh for a cerebral ḍh or ṛh in badhê, for barhê (specimen II).

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There were once upon a time a Jāṭ and his wife. As soon as he had gone to the field and was safe out of the house, his wife used to make mōhan-bhōgs and *chūrmās*¹ and eat them all herself. Then, when he came home in the evening, she used to cry out, 'I'm dying. I'm sick. My head aches. My stomach aches. My feet are bursting. Send for a doctor or for some wise man who will charm me well again.' The Jāṭ thought to himself that this was a queer business. 'What's the matter with her? She's getting fatter every day, and she says she's sick !' So one day he did not go to his field, but lay down and had a snooze in the village rest-house. After a little while he went home, and found his wife making mōhan-bhōgs. Then he thought to himself, 'I must cure her of this, and she'll soon be all right.' So he went to a holy-man and laid the case before him. 'My wife,' said he, 'is turning wanton. She eats mōhan-bhōgs and chūrmās, and then, when I come home from my field in the evening, she troubles my life.' The holy-man told him to bring him four reels of thread, and he would put a spell upon them. So the Jāt brought the four reels of thread to the holy-man, who charmed them, and gave them back to him. Then the Jāt took the reels home and put one in each of the four corners of the room. Then he told his wife that he was going out to look for a doctor, and would be back by nightfall.

As soon as he was out of the way, the wife went into the room to make some more mōhan-bhōgs. Then the reels of thread began to speak. The first said, 'has she come?' The second said, 'let her come.' The third said, 'isn't she afraid?' The fourth said, 'if she is afraid, why does she eat?' The woman came into the room four or five times, and this happened on each occasion. At last she became terrified out of her wits, and fell down on her bed in a faint. Meanwhile the Jāt came home, and said, 'the doctor's coming in the morning. I couldn't get any one to come to-day.' She replied, 'for Heaven's sake, O Childless One,¹ turn this devilry out of the house. I am quite well now.' So the Jāt took out the four reels, and, after giving them back to the holy-man, returned home.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a king whose son would not marry. So he told his ministers to make the prince marry. They hung pictures of various young women on the wall of a place by which the prince used to pass, and he agreed to marry the original of one of the pictures, namely, a Jāt girl named Bachittar Kaur. So they all set out for the marriage. Now he was entangled with a low wench of the town inn, and she accompanied him on his journey to his wedding. She advised him to let her first go and see Bachittar Kaur, and then she would come back and describe her to him. He sent her, and when she returned she said, 'she's horribly ugly. I'd advise you to bandage your eyes when you are walking round the wedding altar with her.' So the prince pretended that his eyes were sore, and kept them tight bandaged during the wedding ceremony. After the marriage rites had been duly performed they returned home, and at nightfall his bride was brought to him. The boy had his eyes tight bandaged, and told her to lie down at the foot of the bed and stay there. This thing went on for three days, and then she said to herself that she must get his eyes unbandaged somehow or other. As for the prince he used to go to the inn each day to visit his trollop. So Bachittar Kaur disguised herself as a Gujar tyre-seller and went to the inn. As soon as the prince saw her face he fell desperately in love with her, and asked her if she was willing to live with anyone as his kept woman. 'Yes,' said she. So the prince asked her where she lived. 'At the Foot-of-the-Bed Hotel,' said she and went away. So the prince wandered about the town asking for the Foot-of-the-Bed Hotel, but no one could tell him where it was, and he returned home weeping and beating his breast. At night he tied up his eyes as usual, and Bachittar Kaur came and lay at the foot of the bed. At dawn she said to herself, 'Well he is a fool, not to understand.' Then she dressed herself like a man and mounted a horse and rode off to the inn. She asked if the king's son was there. The orderlies told her he was. 'Then tell him,' said she, 'that Bachittar Shāh wants to see him.' So the prince came out, and they both rode off on their horses to hunt. In the forest Bachittar Shāh captured a deer, and got down to kill it in the orthodox manner. As she did so she cut her finger, and the prince tore a piece of cloth off his turban and tied up the wound. As he did so he said, 'it is not your finger, but my heart, that is really cut.' Then they returned to the city. When the prince began to go on ahead, she made him stop. Then she galloped her own horse and got home safely without being observed. He waited for his comrade to return, but as she did not, he went to the town inn to console himself there. When he came home in the evening Bachittar Kaur asked him where she was to lie. 'At the foot of the bed,' said he. Then she cried out, 'O mine enemy, when my finger was cut, your heart was cut; and now you tell me to lie at the foot of the bed.' Then the prince tore the bandage from off his eyes, and when he saw her beauty he wept and cried, 'Ah, for so many days hath that inn-wench deceived me.'

MĀLWĀI.

The Mālwā is the name of the old settled dry country of the Sikh Jatts to the east of the river Sutlej. It includes the whole of the British district of Ferozepore, and the greater part of Ludhiana. It also includes the states of Faridkot and Maler-Kotla, and parts of the states of Patiala, Nabha, and Jind. Moreover, we must further include the Chirak Tahsil of the state of Kalsia, which lies in the Ferozepore district. In Ludhiana, to the north of the Mālwā, the rich country on the south side of the Sutlej, in which sugar-cane grows, is known as the Pōwādh. The Pōwādh, as we have already seen, extends further to the south-east, and occupies part of Umballa, and the east of the Phulkian states. We may say that the western boundary of the Mālwā is the Sutlej. Its northern is the Pōwādh country of Ludhiana, and (in Ferozepore) again the Sutlej. Its eastern boundary may be roughly taken as the 76th degree of East Longitude, east of which Pōwādhī Pañjābī is spoken.

South of the Mālwā, in the south of the district of Ferozepore, and in the Sirsa Tahsil of Hissar, lies the Rōhī or Jaṅgal. This is the great dry tract between the valleys of the Ghaggar and of the Sutlej, which was to the Sikhs until lately what the prairie, or backwoods, or bush, was to the early colonists in America and Australia.¹ Cultivation is extending into the Jaṅgal from the Mālwā, and as tracts become settled they become considered as part of the Mālwā, so that the area of the Jaṅgal is continually decreasing. South of the Jaṅgal lies the Bāgrī-speaking country of Bikaner. A mixture of Bāgrī and Pañjābī, which I call Bhaṭṭiānī, is spoken in the extreme south of Ferozepore, and moreover, in that district, extends north along the left bank of the Sutlej under the name of Rāṭhaurī.

The language of the Mālwā and Jaṅgal tracts is practically the same. It is called Mālwāi, or the language of the Mālwā, Jaṅgalī, or the language of the Jaṅgal, and Jātkī, because most of its speakers are Jatts. The use of the latter name should be avoided, so as to prevent confusion with the altogether different Jātkī which is a form of Lahndā.

The number of speakers of Mālwāi, under its varying names, is estimated to be as follows:—

| Locality. | Number of speakers. |
|-----------------------|---------------------|
| Ferozepore | 709,000 |
| Ludhiana | 640,000 |
| Faridkot | 110,000 |
| Maler-Kotla | 75,295 |
| Patiala | 384,500 |
| Nabha | 207,771 |
| Jind | 44,021 |
| Kalsia | 9,467 |
| TOTAL | 2,130,054 |

These figures are somewhat too large, as those for Ludhiana include the inhabitants of the Pōwādh tract, which have not been separately estimated. The excess is not, however, of importance.

Mālwaī does not differ materially from the standard Pañjābī of the grammars. In fact, if we are to judge from the specimens, the standard form of the language is used everywhere (except in that cerebral n and l disappear as we go south), and the irregular forms are not substituted but are employed at option.

The principal peculiarity of Mālwaī is that, as we go south, a dental n and l are substituted for a cerebral n and l respectively. Thus in Ferozepore we have jānā, not jāṇā, to go; hun, not hun, now; nāl, not nāl, with; and kōl, not kōl, near. The letters b and v are freely interchangeable. Thus, bēkh, for vēkh, see; bich or vich, in. The last word also illustrates another characteristic of Mālwaī, that the final consonant of a word is not doubled. Thus, vich, not vichch, in (but vichchō, from in, in which the ch is not final); ik, not ikk, one. Sometimes even medial consonants are not doubled as in ghaliā (not ghalliā), julī (not juttī), nachandī (not nachchandī), all from Ferozepore. It is noteworthy that this non-doubling, with a short preceding vowel, is typical of the Piśācha languages. When i falls between two vowels, it is, as elsewhere, often written y. Thus, āyā, for āiā, came. This is, however, little more than a point of spelling. W between two vowels is often changed to m. Thus, hōmāgā, for hōwāgā, I shall be. This also occurs in Pōwādhī.

In pronouns, āpā is used to mean 'we.' This is borrowed from Rājasthānī, but the meaning of the word is changed. In Rājasthānī and Gujarātī, āpā means only 'we, including the person addressed.' Thus, to give an oft-quoted example, if you say to your cook, 'we shall dine at eight o'clock,' you must not use āpā, or you will invite your cook to dine with you.

In Mālwaī there does not seem to be any such restriction of meaning. Thus Mr. Newton gives, as an example of its use, Mālwe dēs-tē āpā āē-hā, we have come from the Mālwa region.

For the second person plural, note the form thōnā, to you, in the Nābhā specimen.

In Ferozepore, āwdā is regularly employed to mean 'own,' instead of the standard āpnā. Apnā, with the first a short and a dental n, is also commonly met with over the whole tract.

In the other pronouns t is often substituted for s. Thus (Mr. Newton's examples) ut (for us) vēlē, at that time; it (for is) kar-kē, for this reason; kitē (for kisē) wal, in some direction; kit (for kis) kamm, of what use.

Kuchh or kush is 'anything.' Indeed chh seems to be often pronounced as ś or sh in other words.

In verbs the second person singular often loses its nasal and takes the Western Hindi form. Thus, hai, for hai, thou art.

Kharōnā, to stand up, is contracted from kharā-hōnā. So also in Lahndā.

Other borrowings from Western Hindi are—

(1) The occasional employment of the agent case for the subject of an intransitive verb in the past tense. Thus (Ferozepore), chhōtē putrnē giā, literally, by the younger son it was gone, i.e. the younger son went.

(2) The occasional employment of kā for the genitive. Thus, satā dind-kī (for dindī) muhilat, a delay of seven days; gal-kā antrā, the explanation of the thing.

As specimens of Mālwaī I give—

(1) A version of a portion of the Parable of the Prodigal Son from Ludhiana.

- (2) A conversation between two villagers from Ludhiana.
- (3) Another version of the Parable from Taḥṣīl Muktsar in Ferozepore.
- (4) A folktale from Taḥṣīl Fazilka, Ferozepore.
- (5) A folktale from District Phul in the Nabha state.
- (6) A short passage from Thana Gobindgadh in Patiala.

The first five are in the Gurmukhī character, and the sixth in the Persian character.

As the Ludhiana specimens possess some local peculiarities, I give them first, with a brief account of the points which specially apply to this locality.

In Ludhiana, the village people are fond of adding u to words ending in a consonant. Thus, chiru, a space of time; mālu, property; dhanu, wealth; kaḥiku, how much? paru, but; kuchh or kuchhu, anything; biāj or biāju, interest; dudhu, milk. This also occurs in the Braj Bhākhā dialect of Western Hindī.

In spelling, y is sometimes substituted for i between two vowels; thus, hōyā, for hōiā, became.

In the declension of nouns, vichch, in, becomes chi, added directly to the noun as a termination. Thus, mulakchi, in a country; luchchpanēchi, in debauchery; khētāchi, in fields. Similarly, vichchō, from in, becomes chō. Thus, unhāchō, from among them.

The first two personal pronouns often take the forms hamā and tumā in the oblique plural. Thus, hamānū, to us; tumānū, to you. These are still more common in the neighbouring Pōwādhī, where Pañjābī merges into Hindōstānī. There is a curious inversion of the aspirate in thuāḍā, for tuhāḍā, your, and ōdhā, for ōhdā, his. Compare thōnū, to you, in the Nabha specimen. The genitive of the reflexive pronoun is apnā, not āpnā. This also is an Eastern form.

The verb dēnā, to give, makes the first person plural of its future dēmāḡē, we shall give. This is another Eastern peculiarity.

As specimens of the village dialect of Ludhiana I give a portion of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a conversation between two villagers.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Conversation between Būtā Singh and Nathā Singh.

Būtā Singh.—O brother, how much was the outturn of last harvest?

Nathā Singh.—O brother, owing to the drought it was not much. The outturn of the spring crop promised better, but it was damaged owing to want of rain. The gram was completely destroyed by a cold wind, and the rape seed was eaten by caterpillars.

Būtā Singh.—Is your village irrigated by a canal?

Nathā Singh.—Only one ghumāō¹ of my land was irrigated by a canal, but the Field Kanungo refused to give water, when the water was badly wanted; and therefore the outturn of that land was poor.

Būtā Singh.—Now, what will happen?

Nathā Singh.—I will have to pay the revenue, and also to support my family.

Būtā Singh.—Have you taken loan from any banker?

Nathā Singh.—I took 10 rupees on the marriage of my son, and have to pay now the interest on it. The harvest is poor. The loan I took from a banker is a heavy burden on me, and now I have nothing to pay the debt. Later on, I will pay the principal with interest.

Būtā Singh.—Did you take the loan as a debt, or did you hypothecate the land as a security for it?

Nathā Singh.—Four ghumāō of land were hypothecated; the extra sum I took on loan, I will now have to pay the interest on it, but as the outturn is small, I cannot pay the principal at present.

Būtā Singh.—I want to buy a buffalo. Has any man of your village got one for sale?

Nathā Singh.—A Jatt has a buffalo in calf, but the price he demands is too much.

Būtā Singh.—How much milk and ghee does the buffalo give? and how many times has it calved?

Nathā Singh.—It has calved thrice already. It gives 22 seers and 2 seers of milk and butter respectively. Seventy rupees were offered to that Jatt for the buffalo, but he demands 80 rupees.

Būtā Singh.—Such a large sum I cannot spare for buying a buffalo; I want to buy a buffalo worth 40 or 50 rupees.

Nathā Singh.—Search for a buffalo somewhere else.

¹ A ghumāō is a local land measure. Three double paces squared equal one mandāl. Fifty-six mandāls equal one ghumāō.

His Majesty had gone, and finally saw the same Jatt ploughing away on the top of his hillock. The vizier thought to himself that this was probably the fellow who had told the king the puzzling saw, so he stopped there and asked him if the king had been that way lately. 'Indeed he has,' said the Jatt, 'and I had a talk with him.' Then the vizier asked the Jatt the meaning of what he had said, and the other replied that he would tell him if the vizier would fill his water pot and his hookah with rupees. The vizier did so, and the Jatt told him the meaning of the dark saying. Then the vizier returned to the palace and explained it to the king, who was much pleased with the explanation. But the king said to himself that the only person who could have known the meaning of the saying was the Jatt himself, and that the vizier must have got it from him. So he went off to the Jatt again and again said, 'Jatt, you are a fool.' The Jatt replied, 'Sire, I am not a fool. One thing, my drinking pot, and another thing, my hookah, have both been filled with rupees.' Then the king was much pleased, and after giving him a reward for his intelligence returned to his palace.

ik chalaia tir, ik chalaia tukka.

ik bharai jhari, te ik bharai kukha.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

(The following folktale is current all over India. Another version of it will be found on p. 309, Vol. V, Pt. II of this Survey. It will be noticed how the opening agrees with that of the story of King Lear.)

Once upon a time there was a king who had seven daughters. One day he asked them by whose good fortune they were enjoying life. Six of them said that they did so by his good fortune, but the seventh said that it was by her own good fortune.

Then the king asked them like what did they love him. The six said they loved him like sugar, but the seventh said she loved him like salt.

Then the king burst into a fury and ordered her to be married to some maimed cripple. 'Let us see,' said he, 'how she enjoys life by her own good fortune'. So they married her to a cripple, and as is the manner of people of that class, she put him in a basket, and carried him about asking for alms.

One day she put the cripple down on the bank of a pond, and went off to beg by herself. While she was away, the cripple observed that black crows came and bathed in the tank and that when they came out their feathers were white. So he rolled and tumbled to the edge of the water and bathed as they had done. He immediately became clean and whole, and when his wife returned she found him standing there hale and hearty.

BHATṬĪĀNĪ.

The Bhātīs (or, as they are called in the Punjab, Bhattīs) are a Musalmān tribe of Rajput origin which is found widely distributed over the Punjab and North-Western Rajputana. They are specially strong in North Bikaner, and in that portion of the Ferozepore District which is immediately adjoining. This part of the country is known as Bhaṭṭiānā, and one of its chief towns is the famous stronghold of Bhaṭnēr. Owing to the leading part taken by the Bhaṭṭīs in this part of the country in the beginning of the 19th century, the word Bhaṭṭī became applied to all the Musalmān residents of this tract, and their name became almost synonymous with Rāṭh or Pachhādā,—the title given to the Pachhādā Musalmāns (a different tribe) of the Ghaggar Valley.¹

We have seen that one of the names given to the dialect of Pañjābī spoken by the Pachhādā Musalmāns was Rāṭhī, and, as just explained, the same name is given to the dialect of the Bhaṭṭīs of Bikaner, while the dialect spoken by the Bhaṭṭīs of Ferozepore is locally known as Rāṭhaurī. The two Rāṭhīs are not the same dialect, for the Rāṭhī of the Pachhādā Musalmāns is, as we have seen, a mixture of Pōwādhī Pañjābī with Western Hindī, while the Rāṭhī or Rāṭhaurī of the Bhaṭṭīs is Mālwaī Pañjābī mixed with the Bāgrī of North Bikaner.

It will have been observed that this Rāṭhī is a tribal language. In the south of the Fazilka Tahsil of Ferozepore all the inhabitants (whether Bhaṭṭīs or not) speak a language locally known as 'Bāgrī.' An examination, however, of the specimens of this form of speech which have been received from Ferozepore shows that it is not Bāgrī at all. It is exactly the same as the Bhaṭṭī Rāṭhī, a mixture of Pañjābī and Bāgrī, with the latter predominating.

The Bhaṭṭīs of Ferozepore appear under various names (usually those of sub-clans), such as Waṭṭū, Jōyā, Rassiwaṭṭs, or Rāṭhauri. The last name accounts for the title Rāṭhaurī given to their dialect in that district. It is spoken for a considerable distance up the right bank of the Sutlej, in the Fazilka and Mamdot Tahsils, and is the same as the Rāṭhī of Bikaner, and the 'Bāgrī' of Fazilka,—simply a corrupt Pañjābī much mixed with Bāgrī. The proportions of the two forms of speech differ according to locality, but over the whole of these three areas, the general characteristic of the language is the same, and, as some general name is required to include all the varieties of this mixed dialect, I call it Bhaṭṭiānī, from its head-quarters,—Bhaṭṭiānā. Under its various names, Bhaṭṭiānī is reported to be spoken by the following numbers of people:—

|---------------------------------|----------------|
| Rāṭhī of Bikaner | 22,000 |
| 'Bāgrī' of Ferozepore (Fazilka) | 56,000 |
| Rāṭhaurī of Ferozepore | 38,000 |
| TOTAL BHATṬĪĀNĪ | 116,000 |

In the year 1824, the Serampore Missionaries translated the New Testament into this dialect, which they called the 'Bhutuner (i.e. Bhaṭnēr) Language.'

As specimens of Bhaṭṭiānī I give a complete version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the Rāṭhī of Bikaner, and also extracts from it in the so-called Bāgrī, and in the Rāṭhaurī of Ferozepore. Finally, for the sake of comparison, I give a similar extract from the Serampore Bhaṭnēri version of 1824.

RĀTHĪ OF BIKANER.

The version of the Parable here given well illustrates the foregoing remarks. The language is a mixture of Pañjābī and Bāgrī with here and there an idiom borrowed from the Lahndā spoken to the west. Thus, take the very first line. Hēk, one, is Lahndā; dē, (plural masculine), of, is Pañjābī; hā (plural masculine) is Bāgrī. So, elsewhere, jāsā, I will go, is a Bāgrī future with a Pañjābī termination; bhāj-gē, having run, is Bāgrī; khāḍē-hā, they were eating, is half Pañjābī, half Bāgrī; tusāḍā, your, is Pañjābī; thārō, your, is Bāgrī. It is unnecessary to go into further detail.

SO-CALLED BĀGRĪ OF FEROZEPORE.

Fifty-six thousand people are reported to speak Bāgrī in the Fazilka Tahsil of the Punjāb District of Ferozepore, along the Bikaner border. An examination of the specimens sent shows that this dialect has none of the typical Bāgrī characteristics, such as the genitive in gō and the like. It is bad Pañjābī, like the Rāthī of Bikaner mixed with some Bāgrī forms. No importance attaches to this mixed dialect, and it will suffice to give as an example of it a brief extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in transliteration only. The original was written in the Persian and also in the Gurmukhī character.

RATHAURĪ OF FEROZEPORE.

The Rāṭhaurī of Ferozepore is even more of a mixture than the so-called Bāgrī. The foreign element is rather Bikānērī than true Bāgrī as is shown by the use of chhai, to mean 'is'. A short extract from a version of the Parable in transliteration only will be quite sufficient.

PAÑJĀBĪ MERGING INTO LAHNDĀ.

The district of Lahore lies on both sides of the river Ravi. On the east side (in the Bari Doab between the Ravi and the Sutlej) the dialect of Pañjābī spoken is Mājhi. On the west of the Ravi (in the Rechna Doab between the Ravi and the Chenab), the Lahore dialect of Pañjābī shows signs of the increasing influence of Lahndā.

It has already been remarked that the old form of speech from which Lahndā is derived must once have extended far to the east beyond its present territories. In the Eastern Panjab this language has been overlaid by a language belonging to the Central Group, and the resultant language is that now known as Pañjābī. As we go westwards from the Gangetic Doab, relics of the original Lahndā basis become more and more evident. We have already met some noteworthy instances in the Mājhi dialect which is admittedly the best and purest form of Pañjābī. When we cross the Ravi into the Rechna Doab, the Lahndā basis becomes much more in evidence, and the conventional boundary line between Lahndā and Pañjābī after crossing the district of Gujrat runs nearly north and south through this Doab, starting at about Ramnagar in Gujranwala on the Chenab, and running due south to the northern corner of the Montgomery district. Thence it continues its course due south (crossing the Ravi on its way) to the southern corner of the latter district on the banks of the Sutlej. A part of that portion of the Montgomery district which lies to the east of this conventional line is thus in the Bari Doab, but linguistically it belongs to the north-east of the Rechna Doab.

The line described above is a purely conventional one adopted for this Survey. Everywhere in India we meet with instances of languages merging into each other, but nowhere in India do we find the merging so gradual as that which takes place between Lahndā and Pañjābī. The wave of the language of the Central Group, which at first overwhelmed the most eastern Lahndā, gradually lost its force as we go westwards, allowing the Lahndā basis to become more and more evident. The wave extended to the west of the line just described, but by this time it was so shallow, and had lost so much power, that the language is no longer Pañjābī coloured by Lahndā but rather Lahndā coloured by Pañjābī. We may roughly put this line as indicating the boundary between these two conditions of affairs, but in the country near this line, on each side, the local patois is so indefinite that it may with equal correctness be classed with either language, and many authorities may claim that the language spoken immediately to the west of it in Gujranwala and Montgomery is Pañjābī and not Lahndā. Such a claim I do not oppose. The circumstances of the case make opposition out of the question. On the other hand, the line I have drawn is a convenient one, and roughly shows the western boundary of Pañjābī.

To the east of this line we have, first, the north-eastern half of the district of Gujrat; then, in the Rechna Doab, the district of Sialkot, half the district of Gujranwala, the trans-Ravi portion of Lahore, and a small portion of Montgomery. Crossing the Ravi into the Bari Doab we have, to the east of the line, the eastern half of the Montgomery district, roughly corresponding to the Tahsils of Dipalpur and Pak Pattan. Over the whole of this tract, the language is the same,—Pañjābī with a strong infusion of Lahndā. I give three specimens,—one from West Lahore, another from Sialkot, in the north of the tract, and another from Pak Pattan of Montgomery, in the extreme south.

When the boundary line touches the Sutlej at the southern corner of Montgomery, it follows that river for a few miles and then crosses Bahawalpur, so as to include the north-eastern corner of that state. Here the language is the same as that of Pak Pattan and no specimen of it is necessary. This concludes the review of Pañjābī merging into Lahndā.

We may estimate the number of speakers of this mixed dialect as in the table given below. The figures for Gujranwala include about 155,000 speakers of Pañjābī from other parts of the province who have settled in the Chenab Canal Colony, most of them probably speak Mājhi. As given the figures have been revised by the local officials since the Rough Lists of Languages spoken in the Panjab were published. So also the Bahawalpur figures are revised ones—

|------------------------------|-----------|
| North-East Gujrat | 457,200 |
| Sialkot | 1,010,600 |
| East Gujranwala | 505,000 |
| Trans-Ravi, Lahore | 17,398 |
| East Montgomery | 292,426 |
| North Bahawalpur | 150,000 |
| | <hr/> |
| TOTAL | 2,432,024 |
| | <hr/> |

The Lahore figures in the above seem to be too small, but I have no means of checking them, and the loss is probably balanced by the number of Chenab Canal colonists who speak Mājhi.

PAÑJĀBĪ OF WEST LAHORE.

Directly we cross the Ravi into the western portion of Lahore district we find that the Lahndā basis of Pañjābī makes itself much more strongly felt. There are also a few local peculiarities. As a specimen of the dialect of this part of the Lahore district I give a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, which offers several instructive forms.

In pronunciation we may notice the total absence of the cerebral ḷ, as is also the case in the Pañjābī of the Mājāhā. The cerebral ṇ is very capriciously used. Thus, we have gāwan and nachchan in the same sentence. The vowel scale in some words is irregular. The root rah, remain, is sometimes spelt rah, sometimes rih, and sometimes raih. Compare the rēh of the Lahndā of Shāhpur.

In the declension of nouns we may note that the postposition of the agent case is nē, not nai, which is very often omitted (as in Lahndā). Nē is also occasionally used instead of nū, as the sign of the dative. Thus, naukar-nē ākhīā, he said to the servant.

In the pronouns, we have tū used for the agent case singular, as well as for the nominative. Thus, tū niāz dittī, thou gavest a feast. Asā and tusā are often used for the nominative, to mean 'we' and 'you,' respectively. The usual word for 'he' is the Lahndā ō, with an oblique singular us or un. In īdhē for īhdē, of this one, we have a transposition of the aspirate. 'Own' is apnā, not āpnā. The relative pronoun is jērā (cf. Lahndā jehrā). 'What?' is kīh.

The verb substantive regularly takes the Lahndā forms; thus, we have hin, they are; āhā or hā, he was. Sometimes we find jē used to mean 'he is' or 'they are.' In the finite verb we have both the Lahndā form of the future, as in uḥisā-(gā), I will arise, and the Pañjābī one, as in rahāḡā, I will remain.

Now and then we find instances of pronominal suffixes attached to verbs, exactly as in Lahndā. Thus, dittōi, given by thee. The Lahndā present participle is also common. Thus, karēdā for kardā, doing.

We also find instances of the Lahndā negative verb substantive, as in nahā, he was not.

There are also a number of Lahndā expressions. Such are the use of the root chā, raise, prefixed to a verb in order to intensify its meaning. Thus, chā-kītā, was done; chā-jān, consider. So also we may quote (among others occurring in the specimen) as typical Lahndā expressions hikk, one; thigrā, a garment; kāvīr, angry; hatthō, on the contrary.

Mr. Newton, on page 33 of his Panjābī Grammar, states that, in the Lahore district, the word nē is often used redundantly. Thus, ih bī ākh dittā-sā nē, this too he said. I have not met any examples of this in the specimens. It is a question whether in such cases, nē is not, like jē, a pronominal suffix. Lahndā has nē for the second and third persons plural, and it is quite possible that, in Lahore, it may also be used for the singular. In Kāshmīrī, which is closely related to Lahndā, an is used for the singular of the pronoun of the third person.

PAÑJĀBĪ OF SIALKOT, EAST GUJRANWALA, AND NORTH-EAST GUJRAT.

The conventional boundary line between Lahndā and Pañjābī starts at the north end of the Pabbi range in Gujrat, and, entering Gujranwala at Ramnagar, divides that district into two nearly equal parts. The tract to the east of this line embraces the whole of Sialkot, the eastern half of Gujranwala, and the north-east of Gujrat. On the east it has the Mājhi Pañjābī of Gurdaspur, on its south, the mixed dialect of West Lahore just described.

The dialect of this tract has been fully described by Mr. Grahame Bailey and Mr. Cummings, in the works referred to on p. 744. It closely resembles that of West Lahore, and as a specimen I give a short folktale from Sialkot, written in the Persian character, with transliteration and translation.

We may note the following peculiarities in the specimen, nearly all of which are due to the influence of Lahndā. There is a strong tendency to drop the letter h after an accented syllable,¹ and even elsewhere. Thus, rá'ē, for ráhē, they remained; ē or hē, is, and so on. We see the origin of the standard Pañjābī present participle in nā instead of dā in the word dēdā or dēnnā, giving. All over Indo-Aryan India, a d preceded by a nasal may optionally be pronounced as n.

In the declension of nouns, the postposition of the genitive is treated as in Lahndā, so that we have diā or dēā instead of dē agreeing with a masculine noun in the plural.

The pronouns present some irregularities. 'Our' is sāḍḍā, asāḍḍā or asāḍḍā (Mr. Bailey gives sāḍḍā). 'Your' is tusāḍḍā or tohāḍḍā (Mr. Bailey gives tuhāḍḍā). The oblique form singular of the pronoun of the third person is ōs (as the oblique form singular of ih, this, is ēs), and its oblique plural is ōnā or ōhnā. Jērā or jehrā is 'who,' with jis, or the Mālwaī form jil, for its oblique singular.

The following forms of the verb substantive occur,—ā, or hā, I am, we are; ē, thou art; ē, or hē, he, she, it is; sān, or haisān, they were.

For further particulars, the student is referred to the very full details given in the Grammars already referred to.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Our ancestor was Mahr Mithā. He was desirous of leaving his name famous in the world. The Emperor Akbar asked him for his daughter in marriage. He replied that, as he was only a modest landholder while Akbar was Emperor, the match would be an unequal one. But the Emperor insisted, and pressed Mahr Mitha not to consider this point, so that the latter agreed to the betrothal of his daughter, and asked the Emperor to come to his house with the marriage procession. The Mahr's people then called together his relatives and friends. He told them that the Emperor requested his daughter in marriage, and asked their opinion. Some were in favour of the proposal and others were not, but the majority agreed to it, and so the betrothal took place. The Emperor came with his marriage procession and Mahr Mitha called in all the brethren of his caste to feed and serve the bridegroom's party.

Some Jatts accompanied the Emperor, and after the bridegroom's party had stayed in Mahr Mitha's house for two nights, one of the brethren of the latter suggested that alms should be distributed in order to make his name famous.

The people who had come with the Emperor were accompanied by Mirāsīs¹ for service, and so were the brethren who had come at Mahr Mitha's call. They began to distribute alms from the roof of the house. The rupees were of the Emperor Akbar's coinage. Mahr Mitha gave one rupee to each of the Mirāsīs who had accompanied his brethren, but gave only eight annas each to the Mirāsīs who had come with the Jatts of the Emperor's party, for he thought that those Jatts had disgraced him by their presence.

¹ Mirāsīs are a kind of beggar-bard, who attend weddings for what they can pick up.

Then, the marriage having been solemnised, the bridegroom's litter for ceremonial departure was given to the Emperor.

PAÑJĀBĪ OF EAST MONTGOMERY.

As one more example of Pañjābī merging into Lahndā, I give a short extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which comes from the Pak Pattan Tahsil of the Montgomery district. I give it only in the Roman character, with an interlinear translation. No special remarks are required. The language is the same as that of West Lahore and of Sialkot.

ḌŌGRĀ OR ḌŌGRĪ.

I give two specimens of the ḌŌgrā dialect of Pañjābī. Both come from the state of Jammu. For an account of the dialect see pp. 637 ff., ante.

The ḌŌgrā of Gurdaspur and Sialkot in no way differs from that here exemplified, except that in both districts there is, as might be expected, a tendency to employ here and there standard Pañjābī forms.

The first Jammu specimen is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. The second is a short folksong. I give each specimen first in Chamba Ṭākri type, and then in the ordinary ḌŌgrā hand-writing, with a line for line transliteration and translation.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

1. Ah, my soul is uneasy ; my heart longs for the Gaddi.¹ How shall I go and meet him ?

2. Ah, five robbers and thieves² waylay the Gaddi on his path. I pass the night counting the stars.

3. Ah, a passionate love for the Gaddi has taken possession of me, his wife. How shall I go and meet him ?

4. Ah, once a woman has loved, she ever remains in longing for (her) man. I pass the night counting the stars.

² These are the five passions,—lust, anger, avarice, love and pride.

KAṆḌIĀLĪ.

The river Ravi skirts the south-east corner of the Jammu State. On the other side lies a hilly tract forming the north-east corner of the Punjab district of Gurdaspur. The main language of this district is standard Pañjābī, but in this tract, and its neighbourhood, the following hill languages have been reported :—

| | Reported to be spoken by— |
|--------------------|---------------------------|
| Gujarī | 60,000 |
| Dōgrā | 60,000 |
| Kaṇḍiālī | 10,000 |
| TOTAL | 130,000 |

Of these, Gujarī will be dealt with under the Pahārī languages. Dōgrā has just been described. Kaṇḍiālī is the dialect of the country round Shāhpur-Kaṇḍī, close to the Ravi. It is not a distinct dialect, but is merely ordinary Dōgrā mixed with standard Pañjābī. It is unnecessary to give any lengthy specimen of it. A few sentences from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son will suffice to show its character. It is uncertain whether e should be written long, as in Pañjābī, or left unmarked as in Dōgrā. I have followed the latter system.

THE KĀNGRĀ DIALECT.

The District of Kangra proper (excluding Kulu, Lahaul, and Spiti) lies to the north of Hoshiarpur, and to the south of the Chamba State. To its east lies the State of Mandi, and to its west the north-eastern corner of Gurdaspur. The language of Hoshiarpur is Standard Pañjābī, those of Chamba and Mandi are forms of Western Pahārī, and the main languages of that portion of Gurdaspur which lies to the west of Kangra are various forms of Dōgrā. In Kangra itself, on a part of the northern border, near Chamba, the Gādīs who inhabit that tract speak a form of Pahārī. Over the rest of the district we meet with a form of Pañjābī, which is mixed with the neighbouring Dōgrā and Pahārī, and even shows traces of the influence of Kāshmīrī. The number of speakers of the Kāngrā dialect is estimated to be 636,500.

The Kāngrā dialect does not employ the ordinary Gurmukhī character, but is written in that form of Tākṛī which is current in Chamba. It was originally intended to print the specimens in Chamba-Tākṛī type, as has been done in the case of Dōgrā; but difficulties were experienced in obtaining a sufficient supply of the type, and lithographed facsimiles of the manuscript as prepared for the press have therefore been substituted. This manuscript was not written by a native of Kangra. And as the alphabetical system has been explained when dealing with Dōgrā, and as, moreover, the dialect closely resembles Dōgrā in several important points, I have placed the account of this form of speech after that of Dōgrā.

In pronunciation, a short e is common, as in seh, he; tehl, service; babbedā, of a father. Sometimes a long ū is substituted for the final ā of nouns, as in Kāshmīrī; thus, māhū (almost pure Kāshmīrī), a man; chhēlū, a kid. This is also common in the neighbouring Pahārī dialects.

In the declension of nouns, all masculine nouns have an oblique singular form in e, whether they end in a consonant or in a vowel. Thus, babbe, oblique form of babb, a father. This method of forming the masculine oblique case singular, and the formation of the accusative-dative with kī are both typical of Dōgrā. The oblique plural of masculine nouns in ā ends in eā. Thus, ghōreā, of horses, but gharā, of houses.

Feminines ending in vowels and some ending in consonants form the oblique case singular by adding ā, while others ending in consonants form it by adding i. The following table shows the various changes which a noun undergoes in declension:—

| SINGULAR. | | PLURAL. | |
|-----------------------------|-----------------|----------------|-------------------|
| Nominative | Oblique. | Nominative | Oblique. |
| Masculine— | | | |
| Ghōrā , a horse | ghōre | ghōre | ghōreā . |
| Ghar , a house | ghare | ghar | gharā . |
| Bichchā , a scorpion | bichchāe | bichchā | bichchāe . |
| Feminine— | | | |
| Bittī , a daughter | bittīā | bittī | bittīā . |
| Jupā , a woman | jupāe | jupā | jupāe . |
| Baithī , a sister | baithīi | baithī | baithīi . |

The case of the agent is formed as follows:—

| Singular. | Plural. |
|-----------------|-------------------|
| ghōrē | ghōreā̃. |
| gharē | gharā̃. |
| bichchūē | bichchūā̃. |
| biṭṭīē | biṭṭīā̃. |
| junāsē | junāsā̃. |
| baihnē | baihnā̃. |

It will be observed that the agent plural is always the same as the oblique form plural.

The suffix of the accusative-dative is ki or jō.¹ That of the locative is bich. In other respects the declension of nouns follows Pañjabī.

Adjectives follow the rules of Pañjabī, except that an adjective agreeing with a noun in the agent case is itself put in that case. Thus, lanhṛē puttrē, by the younger son.

The first two personal pronouns are thus declined:—

| | I | We. | Thou. | You |
|-------------|-------------------|-----------------------|------------------|------------------------------------|
| Nominative | maĩ | assā̃ | tu | tusā̃ |
| Agent | maĩ | assā̃ | taĩ, tudh | tusā̃. |
| Acc.-Dative | minjō | assājō | teō | tussājō. |
| Locative | minjō-bich | assā̃-bich | teō-bich | tussā̃-bich. |
| Genitive | mērā | mhārā, assājā̃ | tērā | tumhārā, tamhārā, tussājā̃. |

The forms mhārā and tamhārā are taken from Pabāri.

The following are the principal parts of the other pronouns:—

| | That, he, etc | This | Who | That, he, etc | Who? | What? |
|------------|---------------|-------------|----------------|------------------|------------------|------------------------|
| Singular— | | | | | | |
| Nominative | oh | eh | jō, jeh | seh, saih | kun | kiā, kyā. |
| Agent | unĩ | inĩ | jinĩ | tinĩ | kunĩ, kmĩ | ... |
| Oblique | us | is | jis | tis | kus, kuh | hes (dat. kajō) |
| Plural— | | | | | | |
| Nominative | oh | eh | jō, jeh | seh, saih | kun | ... |
| Oblique | unā̃. | inā̃ | jinā̃ | tinā̃ | kinā̃ | ... |

¹ The suffix jō is really the locative of a genitive postposition jā. In Kāngrā jā has become obsolete, but it still survives in a slightly different form in Sindhi. It is derived from the Sanskrit lāryakāh, through the Prakrit kajjā, the ka being dropped according to a well known phonetic rule. The fact that jō is a locative is well shown by its employment with certain postpositions. Such postpositions are originally nouns in the locative. Thus, sāmhnē, before, is really the locative of sāmhnā, front, and means literally 'in the front.' It hence governs the genitive, and, as in Indo-Aryan languages, such genitives are adjectives, they agree, in the Kāngrā dialect, with sāmhnē in gender and case. Hence, tijō sāmhnē, before thee, is literally 'in thy front,' and tijō is the locative masculine of an obsolete genitive tījā*, thy. Similarly, bich, in, is a contraction of an old locative vichōke, in the middle, and tijō bich, in thee, is literally, 'in thy middle,' or 'in the middle of thee.' In an exactly similar way, the Hindi kō is by origin the locative of kā.

The nasalization of the agents singular is often omitted. The agents plural are the same as the oblique forms. The oblique forms plural often insert an h. Thus, unhā̃, inhā̃, etc. 'Anyone' is koi, obl. kusĩ. 'Anything' is kichh. 'Self' is appū, oblique form the same, genitive appā̃.

Adēhā, of this kind; so, tadēhā, jadēhā, kadēhā.

The verb substantive is conjugated as follows:—

Present, I am, etc.

| | Singular. | Plural. |
|----|-----------------|----------------------------|
| 1. | hā̃, hai | hā̃, hā̃, haĩ. |
| 2. | hā̃, hai | hā̃, hā̃, haĩ. |
| 3. | hā̃, hai | hā̃, hai, hin, han. |

The past tense is sing. masc., thā or thū; fem., thī; plur. masc., the; fem., thiā̃.

In the Active Verb, the Infinitive and Participles follow PaŖjābī. Thus the present participle is mārdā or mārnā, striking. The Present Subjunctive follows the analogy of the verb substantive. Thus, mārē or mārai, thou mayst strike; mārā̃, I or we may strike. The first person plural may be mārīē, as in PaŖjābī. The only other tense which presents irregularities is the future, which is conjugated as follows in the masculine. The feminine forms can easily be supplied on the analogy of PaŖjābī—

Future, I shall strike, etc.

| | Singular | Plural. |
|----|-----------------------------------|----------------------|
| 1. | mārgā, mārgā, mārgā, mārgā | mārgē, mārgē. |
| 2. | mārgā, mārgā | mārgē, mārgē. |
| 3. | mārgā, mārgā | mārgē, mārgē. |

We now and then meet stray Pahārī forms of the future, such as hōn, he will be; bhōlā, he will be.

The past participle sometimes drops the i, as in Hindōstānī. Thus, laggā̃, for laggiā̃, begun; milā̃, for miliā̃, got.

There is a Respectful Imperative ending in ā. Thus, rakkhā̃, be good enough to keep me.

The Frequentative compound frequently appears with the force of an ordinary present definite. Thus, mārā kardā-hā̃, I am striking.

The Inceptive compound verb is formed with the direct, and not the oblique form of the infinitive. Thus, karnā laggā̃, he began to do.

Note that contrary to the PaŖjābī and Hindōstānī construction, the verb bōlā̃, to speak, is treated as a transitive verb in the past tenses. Thus, lauhkā̃ puttrā̃ bōlā̃, the younger son said.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

An old woman once deposited fifty rupees with a money-lender, and only very seldom took a few provisions from him against the deposit. One day, when she asked him for her deposit back again, he made up the accounts and told her that there were only five rupees to her credit. She went on taking now and again a quarter of a seer of provisions, and when she again asked him to settle up, he made up the account and told her that now there was nothing left to her credit. When the people heard of this the following saying became current,—

The five took away the fifty, and the quarter of a seer took the five. She fell into the clutches of the money-lender by his deceit. Old woman, come and go.¹

The last sentence is not clear to me. The writer of the specimen explains it as signifying that the people told the old lady to stop transactions with the money lender for good.

BHAṬĒĀLI.

The main dialect of the State of Chamba is known as Chamēāli, and is a form of Western Pahārī. In the west of the state towards Jammu we find a dialect called Bhaṭēāli spoken by an estimated number of 14,000 people. It is a kind of Ḍōgrā, but like Kāngrā is a mixed form of speech.

The Rev. T. Grahame Bailey gives an account of this dialect in his Languages of the Northern Himalayas (London, 1908), and the following sketch of its main peculiarities is based upon this, with a few additions collected from the annexed specimen, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. This is given in facsimile, in the local Ṭākri character, the transliteration being arranged line for line with the original, with the very careless spelling usual in writing in this character made uniform, so as to agree with that of the grammatical sketch.

In the transcription the short e is represented by ĕ and not by e as in the preceding specimens, as it performs an entirely different function, corresponding to the short i of Pañjābī. Thus the Bhaṭēāli mārĕā corresponds to the Pañjābī māriā. Mr. Bailey marks as long several e's which in the preceding pages are marked as short. This has been followed in the case of Bhaṭēāli.

Declension.—With the above exception of the change of e to ē, which is, in this case, little more than a question of spelling, the formation of the oblique form of masculine nouns is much the same as in Kāngrā. The case of the agent is also very similar. Thus :—

| SINGULAR. | | | PLURAL | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|-------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| Nominative. | Oblique | Agent. | Nominative. | Oblique. | Agent. |
| Masculine. | | | | | |
| ghōrā , horse | ghōrĕ | ghōrĕḥ, ghōraḥ | ghōrē | ghōrēḥ | ghōrēḥ |
| hāthi , elephant | hāthi, hāthiē | hāthiḥ, hāthiaḥ | hāthi | hāthiḥ | hāthiḥ |
| Feminine. | | | | | |
| bhain , sister | bhainē or bhainā | bhainē or bhainā | bhainē, bhainā | bhainē, bhainā | bhainē, bhainā |
| gau , cow | gāi | gāi | gauḥ | gauḥ | gauḥ |

It will be noted that the agent plural is always the same as the oblique plural. Bhain is sometimes pronounced bhēn.

The case postpositions are :—

|------------|--|
| Dat.-Acc., | kēā, kī, or kanē. |
| Abl. | kaohhā or kichhā, vichohā or bichohā. |
| Gen. | dā. |
| Loc. | vichch, or bichch, in. |

In the specimen, we come across a few forms which depart from those given above. Thus, we sometimes find forms corresponding to ghōṛā̃, instead of ghōṛēā̃. While the oblique form singular of nouns corresponding to ghar usually ends in ē, it sometimes ends in ā, so that from mulkh, a country, we have both mulkhē and mulkhā. Feminine nouns in ī sometimes drop the final ā of the oblique singular, as in surtī-vichch instead of surtīā-vichch, in memory.

The Pronouns present a few departures from the Ḍōgrā and Kāngrā Standards.

The Personal Pronouns are as follows : —

| I. | We | Thou | You |
|---------------------------------------|-----------------------|---------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Nom. maĩ | aṣā̃, aṣī̃ | tū | tuṣā̃, tusi |
| Agent. maĩ | aṣā̃ | taĩ, tuḍlḥ | tuṣā̃ |
| Dat.-Acc. mukhā̃, miki, mēki | aṣā̃-keā̃, -ki | tukeā̃, tuki | tuṣā̃-keā̃, -ki |
| Abl. maĩ-kachhā̃, mēre kachhā̃ | aṣā̃-kachhā̃ | taĩ-, tēre-kachhā̃ | tuṣā̃-kachhā̃ |
| Gen. mērā̃ | ērā̃ | tērā̃ | tuṣā̃rā̃, tuḥārā̃, tuḍrā̃ |
| Loc. mērē bichch | aṣā̃-bichch | tuddh-bichch | tuṣā̃-bichch |

In the ablative, as usual, we may have kichhā̃ instead of kachhā̃.

For the third person and demonstrative pronouns, we have—

| He, that | | | This | |
|----------|------------------|------------------|-------------|--------------|
| | Sing | Plur | Sing. | Plur |
| Nom. | sē, hē, ō | sē, hē, ō | ēh | ēh |
| Agent. | unni | unhā̃ | unni | inhā̃ |
| Obl. | us | unhā̃ | is | inhā̃ |

In the genitive, we have uddā as well as us-dā̃.

Who, jē, Ag. sing. jinĩ, Obl. sing. jis.

Who? kun, Ag. sing. kunī, Obl. sing. kus, Gen. sing. kudā̃.

What? kyā̃, kē, Gen. kaidā̃.

Other pronouns are kōz, some one, any one; kichchh, something, anything.

Conjugation.—The verb substantive closely follows Kāngrā. Thus :—

Present, I am, etc.

| | Sing. | Plur. |
|---|------------|-----------------|
| 1 | hā̃ | hā̃ |
| 2 | haĩ | hā̃ |
| 3 | hai | han, hin |

The Past is thā, fem. thī, Pl. thē, fem. thīā. Once, in the specimen, we have the Pahārī thō, instead of thā.

The Active verb follows Kāngrā. Thus :—

Present Subjunctive (mārnā, to strike).

mārā, -ē, -ē, -ā or -iā, ā, -an.

Future masc. sing. māhrghā, plur. māhrghē. This tense does not change for person. The feminine is formed in the usual way.

Pres. Part. mārdā.

Past Part. mārēā. In the specimen, we have mīlā as well as mīlēā.

Mr. Grahame Bailey gives the present tense as formed in the usual way,—by suffixing the verb substantive to the present participle; thus, mārdā-hā, I strike. But, in the specimen, there is another present tense, in nā, resembling the infinitive in form. Thus karnā, I do (service). It will be remembered that the Dōgrā present participle may end in nā.

When r immediately precedes n, the two often become ṛ. Thus, marnā, I die, becomes manā, and karnā, to do, becomes kaṇā.

The following are examples of irregular verbs :—

| Infinitive. | Pres Part | Past Part. | Future | 1 Pres. Subj |
|-------------------------------------|---------------|--------------------------------|-------------------------------|----------------|
| paṇā , to fall | ponā | pēā | pōghā or paūghā | pauā . |
| jāṇā , to go | jandā | gēā , gā | jaṅghā | jā . |
| raiṇā , to remain | raiṇdā | rēhā | raiṅghā | rēhā . |
| baiṇā , to sit | baiṇdā | baiṭhā | baiṅghā | bauhā . |
| khāṇā , to eat | khāndā | khādhā | | |
| pīṇā , to drink | pīndā | pītā | | |
| dēṇā , to give | dindā | dittā | dīngḥā | |
| laiṇā , to take | | lēā | | |
| galāṇā , to speak | | galayā or galāyā | | |
| karnā or kaṇā , to do | | kittā | | |

Note the short a in ayā, jandā, jaṅghā, and galayā.
